It's not just a learned skill, it's a way of lifestyle, communication and expression. For me, music is my life, so I didn't choose a career in music, says Aleksandr Aleksandr of the Alexandrov Music Center. For this reason, the center focuses on students, not the system. Our program is for students, says Alexandre. Students are often taught according to the system, but we develop systems and curricula that are tailored to them. Along with his son, Julian, and other teachers, the Alexandrov Music Center offers courses in piano, keyboards, guitar, voice, drums, violin, brass and theory. Originally a pop music-focused school when the center opened in 1998, the school expanded its repertoire to provide training for the Royal College of Music for students who wanted to study classical music. We're integrating the best North American and European approaches, says Alexander. That way, we can tailor it to the interests and aspirations of our students.
