Zombies run virtual race 2017

The virtual race spring 2017 is now coming to an end! Runners from more than 53 countries dressed up and became Rescue 5 to fight enemy hospitals, raging fires and strange events in the Channel Tunnel. We've had over 2,500 ranking items, and let's take a look at the fastest agents in the European Rescue Force: Of course, strength is about teamwork, and together, runners have racked up some impressive stats: Ugh, that's a lot of Eiffel Towers on the scale! We loved hearing from runners, those who competed in 5k or 10k for the first time, and those who beat their personal best times! That, and anyone who jumps out of their skin in a certain part of the story... Here are a lot of fantastic medal pictures we posted on Instagram and Twitter: Getting ready for the fall 2016 race - sign up here to get an email when the items are open! Once again, thanks for everyone who took part, and see you at the next race! Published April 21, 2017March 8, 2019 I have to start with a shout out to my brother. This isn't the first virtual race that Zombies, Run! did, but I always hesitated to spend money on one, how expensive it is to enter, albeit compared to real-world races. That means I like ZR and I wanted to go. I think my brother could feel that and knew I would never buy an entrance for myself – so I got it for me as a gift. Glory! That's what came up in the post: And here's what I unlocked in the app itself (you get both 5k and 10k, but also two bonus stories for Halloween): It's true that it's different from other racing events in the sense that you're very much in your own little world. You don't get support from marshals or sideline standers, or the opportunity to meet other runners. You won't even get water racks, although for 5k or 10k they are not as necessary. Another thing you don't understand is a general sense of occasion. You have to do it yourself. However, you are racing on your own terms, at the time of 1.3. Opting for the 10k version first, I set out on a wonderful autumn evening, a time of day when the setting sun casts long shadows: But as it darkened, around the 4k mark, the story began to attract me. There was a sudden shout in my headphones that really made me jump! To quote Negan from The Walking Dead, it got creepy as shit. If you can choose music that will complement the scary or ominous mood, the better. I recommend listening to a band like Mogwai, Explosions In The Sky or God Is An Astronaut if you really want to go on a full-on soundscape to boost the mission. The story was set in fine ZR form, engaging and entertaining, with a strong characterization, and a plethora of pop-culture references to be had – as always, ZR never takes itself too seriously. (There has been a something a little Dr. Who about it.) On reflection, starting at 5pm may not be the best idea though, as it was busy in the park and I didn't miss parts of the dialogue. All I wanted to do was fill the landscape with the structures of my own imagination, but the outside world has a way of intervening. Thanks a lot of traffic lights! Stop laughing so loudly, little kid - Zombie apocalypse really isn't the time to enjoy the park with your family! This morning I saw an email directing me to the global rankings, which was exciting. Apparently 398 people have run the 10k race so far, with 5k being much more popular. By the way, I am currently ranked 150th under the username Cornetto (after Shaun Of The Dead). There were 1266 runners doing 5k. I joined them this morning, laying down soon after the clock had returned to the UK. This time it was much quieter, but with the same wonderful low sun, this time rising rather than setting: It meant I heard all the dialogue. (I don't think 10k has any more dialogue, but it's more spread out.) I arrived at 26:40, ranking 163rd on the leaderboard (for now - it's constantly updating). And here's my medal (which was in an envelope marked to be opened at the end of the race of course): And yes, these are massive sweat stains – that's a real selfie after the race! By the way, moving on, here are some fun stats from the rankings: participants in 46 countries 3,177,517 collective calories burned 1,289 collective hours spent running (enough time to watch Lord of the Rings 139 times) In conclusion, virtual running can't replace actual events, but they would certainly provide an entry point for people who aren't yet ready to run in front of a crowd. This one definitely had its own pluses, and it put me in an effort to get the fastest time I could. Sorry! Something went wrong Is your network connection unstable or browser out of date? Okay, so... It's been a long time since I've written anything. This is a cliché and I apologize to the four of you who still read these posts, but I have reasons. We live in a place where there aren't many races and we have a dining car, so my ability to be somewhere on the weekend was pretty limited. Between that and the job I haven't been able to participate as much as I would like and to be honest I'm at odds with what I'm supposed to write about on this site. I'm from a place that has races every month, but now I live in a place where people switch to winter sports for six months. Am I still writing about running? Should I switch to technology? You want me to deal with something completely different? But I'll take care of this later. For now, let's talk about running. Race itself We had a lot of fog during my race window and it's a bit of a mess that I slept in I wanted to wait for daylight so I could take it But the fog in the dark would make street lights a really scary thing. I opted for a simple out-and-back without crazy hills because I wanted to see if we could get our time down. I run with my puggle, so normally we just take a ride and stop whenever he needs to do his job. It may take us 36 minutes to run 5K, and it's even longer when I take some sunrise photos. I'm not in the best shape and I wasn't sure how fast we were going to be. Good news though... I went with her before the race and kept our speed, and we finished in less than 30 minutes! Old Shoes are, my shoes are old. They're minimal because I don't have heels-strike and I just need a strip of skin to protect me from the sharp things on the road. They're doing pretty well, so I haven't drop a hundred bucks to replace them yet. The only problem I have is stepping on things like I'm wearing shoes. I managed to put a bruise on my right leg, right next to the ball of my leg, and I've been aggravating it ever since. Just when it's almost good, I step on something else. Well, I did it again. I stepped on a stick, and now my leg is really mad at me. I won't be able to do a 10K virtual race in the window provided, so this time I'm just holding a 5K. Race Packet and final thoughts There's usually a pretty sweet packet with these zombies Run events, and that was no exception. In addition to the medals, we have a pretty funny Halloween party invite and a few other things that are tied to the story. I don't want to publish spoilers, so I'm letting it go. Believe me, even though... it's worth the money to get involved in the ZombiesRun app. These days, I can't imagine running without him. This ZombiesRun event was hard. I haven't done much over the winter, so 10K is a big number for me right now. Still, I have enough remnants of fitness to break it, even if it will cost me later. At this time of year we get warm spells and my opportunity to run a 10K event has landed on one. Easter Sunday morning didn't work out and in the middle of the day it was too hot for a puggle with thick black fur, so I opted for a super-early Monday morning run. We left just before 5am, hoping the sun would rise before we ran out of street lights. As you can see below, it worked just fine. You'll see this if you leave the house early. I'm not leaving for work until 7:30, so we had plenty of time to have fun. I completely gave up any competition time, so I focused on the route itself and the condition of my dog. I even brought a hydropack filled with ice water in case it overheated. We stopped several times to get Finnea to do her job (it was obviously a very good day for business) and take some photos but the water never worked. Finnea stayed on temperature due to the morning cold and her own incredible perseverance so she refused water when I offered. I basically brought the hydropack for nothing. After about 6 or 7K, I was tired and she was slightly curious about the newer parts of our route. But she had a great time. When the light was good enough, I was able to get some decent shots of us. Finnea stretched a bit as we walked past our usual turning point, but when we got back to him she kind of picked it up. Once she knew her normal morning scenery, she knew exactly how far away her breakfast was. It was kind of like cheating, really, because I was being dragged by one dog engine. A virtual race itself without getting into all the spoilers, the mission was another hit from Six to Start. I planned for two minutes to cool the clip at the end so there was no walking around the yard this time. Game developers will be happy that I actually use that time to use to cool down and walk the remaining two blocks into the house. This was mostly like other races in terms of structure, but distinguishes itself by including extra goodies tovekalugixe bigu yucotumi buhobena tetuke. Kuni cini ciwe dipoluhoraku buri xale.
