Home furniture installation services

The meaning of the house is changing. The 2020 home has become a squeezed office, an improvised classroom, a reluctant gym, and a spontaneous family restaurant all at once. And in this period of improvised life, rental furniture may be the only thing we can commit to these days. Furniture rental was on the rise before the pandemic, but since covid-19 reduced the world to the size of our homes, furniture rental has emerged as a viable and more sustainable solution for a moving world. Say hello to the furniture without obligation: this is the motto of Fernish, the premium furniture rental company that allows you to binge on the TV on that velvet sofa you've always wanted, until you decide to keep it, return it, or swap it for that silky couch you've always wanted. Everything is so fluid now, and this level of flexibility speaks very well for our service, says Michael Barlow, co-founder and CEO of the company. With the increase in remote work and temporary configurations at mom and dad's home, Fernish saw a rather predictable 315% increase in home office orders, but also a surprising increase in decorations and soft products: pillow and throw orders increased by 80% and mirror and wall art orders increased by 105%. You're looking to refresh your space now that your home isn't just your home, he says Michael. If rental isn't exactly new. Since 1986, Rent-a-Center's rent-to-own model has taken billions of dollars in U.S. revenue. But unlike Rent-a-Center, which caters to consumers short of money, next-generation mobile rental services like Feather, Furnishr, and Casa One have been designed for a younger crowd with a penchant for good design. The typical Fernish customer is about 20 or 30 years old and even 90% of Fernish customers had never thought of renting furniture before. Fernish allows you to try everything from accent chairs to bar trolleys to plants. But its most popular feature is the Curated Room, which allows you to choose from a selection of predesignated rooms that vary in style from mid-modern downtown to modern industrial to California chic. The luxury of non-commitment comes at a price: you're charged less for less than a piece, but if you fall in love with that dresser and decide you're ready to commit after all, you can apply your previous monthly payments to the purchase price and own it completely. And when that desk is rendered useless because your office is back, and life is back, and the pandemic is nothing more than a grain in your rearview mirror, Fernish will lift you up for free. Except that unlike the 10 of tons of furniture going to landfill every year, your desk will be repainted, repainted and disinfected through an 11-step sanitation process and all damaged parts will be repaired. Your old desk, now as good as new, will then be shipped to beautify someone else's office. Other. we put into circulation must be durable, modular and refutable, says Michael. We have thousands of products in their third cycle and [people] can't understand the difference. The appeal of renting furniture in hazy times like these is not surprising. It is convenient, flexible and fits directly into a lifestyle where everything, even goats, can be delivered at your fingertips. And while there's still work to be done with the carbon footprint of a supply chain that depends on deliveries and pickups back and forth, renting your next set of bedside tables remains a greener alternative to disposable flatpacks that you're bound to get rid of when the world reopens. The circular economy is the future of consumption globally, says Michael. What we've been focusing on is taking it to the furniture. This site is not available in your country
