Qatari vehicles entered Saudi Arabia via a land border on Saturday for the first time since Arab states severed diplomatic and transport ties with Doha in mid-2017, Saudi state television announced, following an agreement reached this week to restore relations. Saudi Arabia on Tuesday announced a U.S.-backed agreement to end a bitter dispute with Qatar that has seen Riyadh, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain and Egypt impose an embargo on Doha over allegations that it supports terrorism and surrenders to enemy Iran. Qatar denies the accusations and says the boycott was aimed at restricting its sovereignty. Of the 10,000 Britons who responded to a MysteryVibe study, a third reported having fewer sex in 2020 than in 2019. Women's sex lives were hardest hit by the pandemic, according to the study, with four in ten reporting less sex in 2020. A quarter of Britons said they hadn't had sex at all in 2020 - not too surprising given the difficulty COVID-19 has done dating, but it's affected people in relationships too. A similar number said they did not remember when they last had sex. Almost 40% of Britons said they had less sex in 2020 because their libido had decreased, while 25% attributed their lack of sexual activity to increased anxiety as the pandemic set in. Some 17% said they had less sex last year because they felt less attractive than in 2019. It is clear that the British public is suffering from a sexual recession. Whether it's performance fears, a lack of libido or external pressures on life, the UK is in a sexual rut, said Dr. Soum Rakshit of MysteryVibe. As attitudes towards sex continue to evolve, we can't just look aside. We all have a responsibility to open up the national conversation about sex, pleasure and health and to get people to have fun again. Clare Bedford, a psychosexual and relationship therapist, said it was not surprising that the global pandemic and successive blockages had affected our sex lives. Psychological causes such as stress and anxiety have had a negative impact on sexual desire, which is reflected in the results of this research, she said. It's important for us to start having these difficult conversations, so that we can normalize the challenges people face in order to create a more positive and healthy sexual relationship with ourselves and with others. Foreign companies wanted to give us vaccines to be tested on the Iranian people. But the Ministry of Health prevented it, Rouhani said in televised remarks, without naming the companies or giving further details. Our staff will not be a test device for vaccine manufacturing companies, he added. We will buy safe foreign vaccines. Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran's highest authority, said on Friday that the United States and Britain were not trustworthy and may be seeking to extend Covid-19 to other countries. Khamenei tweeted on Friday: The importation of vaccines made in the United States or the United Kingdom is prohibited, accompanied by the hashtag #CoronaVaccine.Twitter deleted the tweet and posted a message saying it had violated the platform's anti-misinformation rules. Khamenei's edict prohibits imports of BioNTech/Pfizer, Moderna and AstraZeneca/Oxford anti-Covid-19 jabs. Reacting to the Supreme Leader's decision, The World Health Organization's Director of Emergency Situations, Michael Ryan, said the world body had repeatedly called for not politicizing this virus. Escalating tensions with UsIran have reported more than 1.2 million cases of the new coronavirus, which have caused more than 56,000 deaths. He accused the U.S. arch-enemy of obstructing their access to vaccines through a harsh sanctions regime. While food and medicines are technically exempt from these measures, international banks tend to reject transactions involving Iran.Rouhani said last month that Washington had demanded that Tehran pay for the drugs through U.S. banks, adding that he had feared that the U.S. would seize the money. The pandemic intensified for months between Tehran and Washington after U.S. President Donald Trump unilaterally pulled out of a 2015 treaty on Iran's nuclear program and reimposed stifling sanctions. In March last year, Khamenei rejected Mr. Trump's offer to help deal with the pandemic, saying he did not trust the U.S. intentions, Iran's most vicious. Iran last month launched clinical trials of its own Covid-19 vaccine developed inside the Islamic Republic, the Middle East country hardest hit by the pandemic. The Iranian Red Crescent said Friday that U.S.-based Iranian scientists had planned to send 150,000 doses of the BioNTech/Pfizer vaccine to Iran, but that delivery had been cancelled following Khamenei's comments. One million doses of the vaccine would have been delivered to the Red Crescent a third country, he said in a statement widely reported in local media. Khamenei said in a televised address Friday that if the Americans had been able to produce a reliable vaccine, the coronavirus disaster would not have happened in their country. Khamenei also tweeted that given our experience with HIV-contaminated blood supplies in France, French vaccines are not trustworthy either. It was a reference to a scandal in the 1980s in which HIV-infected blood was distributed in France and then abroad, even after the government became aware of the problem. Hundreds of people in Iran were among those infected. The then French Prime Minister, Laurent Fabius, was charged with manslaughter but acquitted in 1999, while his health minister was convicted but never punished. Here are the top five stocks I would buy for my portfolio this year to capitalize on the improved outlook for the global economy. The post The 5 Best Stocks I Would Buy for My Portfolio in 2021 first appeared on The Motley Fool UK. (Bloomberg) -- The benchmark emerging market equity index has hit a record high, on top of its previous peak before the 2008 financial crisis, as a flood of liquidity and optimism about a global economic rebound fuels risk appetite. The MSCI emerging markets index rose 2.4% to 1,353.53 points at Friday's close, extending its recovery from the March rout to 80%. This milestone comes after stock market valuations and market capitalization both hit record highs in a rally that added $10.8 trillion in just over nine months, the fastest wealth creation episode in emerging market history. While the wave of records underscores the strength of risk change in global markets since Joe Biden's victory in the U.S. election, it is already causing nervousness among some emerging equities are overheating. Even though profit estimates continue to rise, the index has surged so rapidly that technical indicators are in the red. Short traders have bet record amounts the gains are unsustainable. And an increase in volumes reflects a sense of urgency among traders. Biggest gains in emerging marketsYet, for now, investors can be forgiven for savoring the record, which came after a 13-year wait. Emerging market equities have underperformed their U.S. peers over the past decade and have often been hardest hit by risk changes from the cone crisis to slowing growth in China and Donald Trump's trade war. But developing countries have also been an image of resilience. The value of equities, driven by the addition of countries such as Saudi Arabia and Pakistan to the asset class, has almost doubled since the previous record of $26.2 trillion. The MSCI indicator is now trading at 15.8 times its members' expected earnings, compared to its 15-year average of 11.2. Analysts have raised their earnings forecast for the index by 24% over the past nine months. Nevertheless, with annualized volatility of about 25%, emerging market equities remain vulnerable to sudden changes in direction. While the risks surrounding the pandemic and the U.S. presidential transition may have diminished, many threats could further halt the recovery. U.S. Treasury yields are rising, which could force traders to demand higher returns on shares in developing countries, leading to a decline in share prices. Any surprises in Biden's foreign and trade policies may need to be taken into account. The resumption of growth in emerging economies remains uneven and the fight against mass vaccination could cause problems. Any celebration of the record-breaking MSCI index should be short and tempered by measures to protect against potential losses. The relative strength index on the monthly gauge chart has reached the so-called overbought level of 70, which has announced bear markets in the past.
