MySejahtera Check-In is an extension of mysejahtera, where it provides small businesses, restaurants, shops, agencies, construction sites, businesses, schools, hotels and all types of space to follow the standard procedures developed by the government in light of the COVID-19 outbreak in Malaysia. Good-bye, food, how are you? By now you should know that check-in the app is mandatory at the entrance to the rooms, except for those who do not have a smart phone. Companies are also required to offer mysejahtera check-in with pencil and paper method. The latest update for the app now includes the check-in address under the QR code that companies should consider. MySejahtera's latest update is an address listed under the QR Code: Senior Minister Datuk Seri Ismail Sabri Yaakob previously stated that the use of MySejahtera is mandatory and applies to both individuals and businesses. Those without a smart phone or rural areas with poor internet access can be released, but they must register the information using other monitoring methods. Photo: Irene Lim (Facebook) Photo: Irene Lim (Facebook) The latest version of the MySejahtera app is a new update where the full address shows under the QR code with the name of the premise. Companies should be aware of this and upgrade their MySejahtera to the latest version. Photo: Irene Lim (Facebook) Photo: Irene Lim (Facebook) While the government has not yet released any announcements about this, it is best for companies to update their QR code. This can avoid unnecessary problems or conflicts. Foodies, if you're a business owner, be careful and keep yourself updated. Don't forget to share it with your friends or someone you know owns a business so they can find out. That's all, good day in advance and good-bye!
