Scary maze know your meme

Internet Screamers, also known as Jumpscares, are practical jokes that are meant to scare the viewer by sharply flashing a disturbing image or playing a loud and scary noise. Howlers are often used as bait and change trolling type in online forums. Origin The first known howler Kikia began circulating on the Taiwanese web in 2003, which features a poorly drawn boy sitting in a field and walking in a market before the screen turned white and a scary face of the video game Fatal Frame II is suddenly flashed on the screen (shown below). Also in 2003, the Scary Maze Game was released online by developer Jeremy Winterrowd. At the end of the third level of the flash game, the player is greeted by a large image of the character Regan McNeil (played by Linda Blair) in the 1973 horror film The Exorcist. In July 2005, German beverage company K-Fee released a commercial known as the Ghost Car in which a zombie abruptly opens up on screen during peaceful filming of a car driving through an idyllic scene (shown below). In 2011, South Korean webcomic horror The Bong-Chon Dong Ghost was released, which contained a two-part jump into the comic book. In February 2013, the Anne.jpg flash was released on the Akk-II website to trick users with a fake file name hyperlink. Instead of a static image, the site opens immediately and flashes with an image of creepy character Jeff The Killer along with a loud scream. Reaction video Scary joking reactions are video recordings of people tricked into viewing an internet howler. Search interest The Scary Maze Game is a popular prank and fear shock site typically presented to the viewer as a flash-based puzzle game that requires a high level of concentration, just before disturbing the unsuspecting player with a close-up image of a horrible-looking woman and audio clips of an extremely loud scream. One of the oldest and best-known bait-and-switch scary pranks to date, the scary maze game has inspired dozens of scary prank reaction videos on YouTube and elsewhere online. Origin According to the scary maze games website, the original Scary Maze Game (shown below) was created by developer Jeremy Winterrowd in 2003. At the end of the third level of the game, the player is greeted by a large image of the character Regan McNeil (played by Linda Blair) in the 1973 horror film The Exorcist.
