Guess the word game online friend, or I'll call him your partner (since you can play with strangers). The game starts with you and your partner each saying a word. In the second round, you both look at the words in the first round and say a word that is related to both words. If you say the same word, you win! If not, repeat using the words in the second round. Look at the two most recent words and say another word that refers to the two. The ultimate goal is to say the same word as your partner. If you and your partner say almost the same thing, you can press the This Matters button! to pretend that the game should end. If your partner also hits the button, then the game is over. For example, I played a game in which I said Secretary of State and my partner said Secretary of State. During the game, you can chat with your partner and put fun stamps and emoticons on the words that have been played. Using a stamp costs a banana. Oh, yes - bananas. There are three ways to spend bananas: use a stamp, say two words at the same time and start a game. Yes, you read this right - it costs two bananas to play a game. For more bananas, you must either buy them in increments of 20, 50, 100, or 10,000, ranging from $0.99 to $49.99, or watch a 30-second ad in exchange for a banana. I don't like that. I'm more than willing to pay for a great game, but having to pay to continue playing (without new content) is very annoying. It bothers me even more, because the tutorial does not mention that each game will cost 2 bananas. Instead, I burned through my bananas by using stamps with no idea that I was giving up games to do so. Ad removal payment ($2.99) doesn't change things - you still need to watch ads (or pay) to get more bananas. A 30-second ad only gives half a game, so this adds to the frustration. To find out that a game cost 2 bananas, I had to go back to the tutorial, scroll through 13 pages, then tap more tips. This is simply a bad user experience. However, despite this greedy business model, Say the Same Thing is an extremely fun game. Good login with Facebook or Game Center not both) Turn-by-turn game with notification Chat with your partner This counts for times when the answers are essentially the same View past games Stamps are stylish fun Play against random opponents Play against band members OK Go (wait long though) Remove ads for $2.99 Bad tutorial is not in advance about the fact that each game you play costs 2 bananas Even after ad-free version, you have to watch ads to get more bananas or buy more bananas Some users find tutorial to be confused bottom line I had a lot of fun and wasted too much time playing Say the same thing. It's a refreshing new pun that actually has the potential to be quite hilarious. I had a game with fellow iMore editor, Ally Kazmucha, which was 32 long rounds and ranged from Star Wars, to soda, to Lindsay Lohan, to ice cream, and to some topics that are too inappropriate to mention here - now that is some good honest fun! Hopefully those behind say the same thing re-believe their business model and, at the very least, increase the number of bananas earned for watching an ad.
