Source: FactSet Snapchat's big year rolled along on Tuesday, with Snap Inc. reporting its Q3 revenue jumped 52% over the same time last year — sending news that its share price soared more. The Los Angeles-based company also added 11 million new daily users — up 19% from Q3 2019 — putting it at 249 million in total. For Q3, Snap reported revenue of $679 million, driving previous analyst estimates of $556 million. The company also posted an unexpected adjusted profit, with adjusted EPS of Wall Street's 5 percent loss expectations topping $0.01. Our focus on delivering value to our community and advertising partners is delivering positive results during this challenging time. We are excited about the growth of our business in Q3 as we continue to make long-term investments in our future, said Evan Spiegel, CEO of SNAP. Adopting augmented reality is happening faster than we had previously anticipated, and we're working together as a team to execute many opportunities before us. More users are being sent more photos, with the company reporting a 25% increase in pictures and messages from last year. SNAP's third-quarter net loss also fell to $200 million, down $27 million from Q3 2019. Snap's share price surged 15% soon after reports came out, pushing the company north of $33.00 per share. Heading into Tuesday, Snap's share price had already jumped more than 30% since early August, helping the company reach heights it hadn't seen since the first week it went public in 2017. The company's share price has risen 70% since the beginning of 2020, matching with an overall tech boom that has been accelerated by the broader COVID-19 lockdown. As TheWrap reported a few months ago, Snapchat has continued to double down on short-form original shows and gaming as a way to keep users busy — something the company hopes will draw more attention to its ads. On Tuesday, Snap said it has seen a 50% increase in time spent watching its shows since last year — though the company wasn't part of how many minutes that per day Comes out on. However, some points can be improved so that it will actually be more interesting. It's quite fast and easy to use, although the edges require a firm pulse to make everyone right, because the only manual tool is the brush. If there was a point selection tool as Photoshop, the work would be much more accurate, but it is possible to achieve the same results with this application. Area selection is an interesting feature that sits the image in a different and very simple way. In this way, you may not have the effect of having a single object of color, but still achieve an interesting and artistic result. The problem is that having a paid app is very easy. For example, Color Splash Smart is a free program that brings P&B in addition to the possibility of only coloring and creating parts of image, filters and interesting effects to further improve the image. To be perfectly worth it, Color Splash will have to do a point selection tool and filter to edit photos, two important features for those looking for better results in this type of editing. Version.
