Dragon age inquisition war table timeskip pc

Message 5 of 20 (42,586 Views) in: Disambiguations, Dragon Age: Inquisition objects Edit Share In Dragon Age: Inquisition, the war table is used to send advisors and their forces to complete various operations around Thedas to unlock locations, receive rewards, gain influence and/or progress the story. There are two types of operations - mission operations and scouting operations. Mission operations take time to complete and generally gain inquisition rewards and/or influence. The rewards and overall implementation time may change depending on the sent adviser. Mission timers run in real time, regardless of saving file time. Any storage created after the mission is started counts down the timer even when the file is not the active file (i.e. the file loaded when selecting 'Continue' on the title screen) and even when the system is turned off and disconnected. This allows operations that are otherwise quite long (18-24 hours long without agents) to be completed within a reasonable period of real world time. To combat this, agents recruited lower completion times by 5% for the counselor to which they are assigned. In addition, some operations have a preferred advisor who can complete the task 20% faster, but this does not always lead to an ideal result. The times presented here are without agents, but with the preferred advisor time reduction taken into account. Scouting operations are always completed immediately and cost power instead. While the advisers are at the table, they will engage with each other. Rewards for certain war table operations vary depending on whether patch 10 and/or Trespasser DLC has been installed. Turn off the game. Go out and do other things. And when the game is ready to let you continue, start playing again. The warboard missions continue even when you're not playing the game. Which I'm pretty happy to have to play the fifteen hours of missions in the game? No thanks. My strategy so far has been to just start longer ones before I go out or go to bed, and go through the shorter ones when I'm actually playing. Set your PC clock forward or the console clock forward. So did you minimize the game, put the clock forward then resume? Or do you have to close the game / origin? just everything + the tab out change the time so go back to the game make nto have to close and relaunch just tested this to save time. Works fine. Nothing spoils. actually change time with an alt tab. I play 2 2 paralelly. While one is on long missions I play with the other. The date change messes up my antivirus. videogame_asset My Games When you're signed in, you can select up to 12 games that appear as favorites in this menu. I used it on someone who would take 24 hours on a whim. Decided not to use it anymore so I didn't break the game for myself, but just figured I'd pass on the info to anyone who might want it. I would start the mission, save, exit games and origin, change the clock, open the game again and be good to go. Go.
