Home arcade maker Arcade1Up announced the first wave in its lineup of games for 2020 on IGN's Summer of Gaming livestream yesterday. The games revealed that it covered a wide broadcast and the Arcade1UP show will not be contained resting on its arcade laurels. First, and the most traditional (but also surprising) release is the Capcom Vs.cab(s). There are two versions, and each includes a Marvel Super Nintendo (!) title to complete the selection. The only game included in both taxis is Marvel Vs. Capcom: Clash of Heroes. One has Marvel Super Heroes, Marvel Super Heroes Vs. Capcom, and Marvel Super Heroes: Gem War. The alternative taxi contains X-Men: Children of the Atom, X-Men Vs. Street Fighter, and X-Men: Mutant Apocalypse. The cabins each have their own variants of art, and Player 2, 6 capcom design buttons. Secondly, we have a very interesting selection, and a new angle angle Arcade1Up, the shooting cabinet, starting with a selection of Big Buck Hunter games. This taxi looks beautifully executed, and Arcade1Up representative John D. confirmed in a livestream that the cabinet uses Sinden Lightgun technology. The inclusion of this is great news, and clues in exciting games to come. This taxi comes with Big Buck Hunter: Open Season, Big Buck: World, and Big Buck: Outback. This cabinet will certainly open the company to a new audience and new retail associations. On the traditional side, the latest revelation was a big surprise: Ms. Pac-Man. It's an essential classic, perhaps the uniquely dearest retro arcade game. He has lived through a very difficult licensing situation for years, and the fact that A1Up managed to unravel this mess by bringing a product like this to market speaks highly to its behind-the-scenes business operation. The cabinet is impressive, and also includes Pac-Mania, Galaxian and Pac-Man Plus. There is also a reported alternative version (again from the live broadcast) that includes Ms. Pac-Man, Rally-X, Dig Dug, and another unnamed title. This alternative selection is presumably aimed at people who have already bought into Arcade1Up products, and don't want a repeat of games in their home settings. Finally, and perhaps the most exciting news, Arcade1Up has revealed its first virtual pinball machine. Along with Zen Studios and running a tight version of Pinball FX3, each machine will have 10 games included, along with solenoids for haptic feedback, a digital plunger, an accelerometer to tilt, and a second DMD display dedicated to the machine's headboard. The company has previously shown Star Wars and Attack from Mars virtual pinball machines at various industry fairs, and the 3 titles will reportedly be released in the fall. With this announcement, Arcade1Up is showing its commitment to the longevity and growth of its business, and all four of these cabinets point to exciting things to come for both new and existing fans. Stay tuned to your official website and twitter feed for news, final prices and availability. Charlie's early attempts at play did not go well. Repeated and unsuccessful with the first Goomba in Super Mario Brothers 1 they reached their first game trip. Inadvertently, he would become an avid player of all platforms, with Nintendo always sitting on the highest pedestal. Except for this Halo 3 incident in 2007. We don't talk about it. It never happened. Charlie currently enjoys playing games on as many platforms as he can get his hands on, with current favorites being the Switch, 3DS and Neo Geo. When he's not playing games, Charlie is a live sound engineer and manager of his production company, Clear Harmonies, His in Washington, D.C. Charlie enjoys talking about games almost as much as playing them, and he loves meeting new people, so he beat him! Play: All of them games. Games. 25. We can't wait to see the excitement of those who receive Arcade1Up as a gift this year. #A1UpGifts2020 #HolidayGifts #Christmas #Xmas #Arcade1Up Arcade1Up Pinball Andy Robertson Tastemakers have offered homemade versions of arcade cabinets for nearly two years on their Arcade1Up machines. Along with diversifying this home arcade line, home pinball is being added. I met with Scott Bachrach, the enigmatic CEO of Tastemakers, to ask him about the rise of arcade product at home Arcade1Up and whether extending this to the world of pinball is a sensible risk. This has been an interesting journey. Tastemakers has become a completely different business since October 2018. We didn't know what we had, so 2018 was an item. The article became a category and now this is our business. We migrated away from the other things we did because Arcade1Up is now the main thing we do. This ability and desire to quickly scale the business based on the success of this first line of product seems to be what has catapulted tasters to grow as fast as it has. But a big part of it was not just repeating home arcade products for different franchises, but iterating design and feedback-based technology. Listening to fan feedback, and a fair amount of criticism, he quickly moved to higher quality components, the ability to save high scores, protective laminate covers over decals, larger playing surfaces for four player machines, stereo sound and light marquees. This year a new online multiplayer feature will be added for the NBA Jam machine so you can play other people in different physical locations. It is a way that Bachrach was keen to highlight along with the fact that there was no subscription needed. Arcade1Up Pinball Andy Robertson When I spoke to Bachrach last year I had wondered if pinball could be next for them. With a wink, he laughed at the suggestion, at the time, but this year they have announced replica pinball machines. These are not as I had imagined, a physical recreation of the arcade version, but a video pinball integration into your experience in the arcade replica box. We're doing digital pinball. It's a growing category. Like the homemade arcades, we saw a large portion of space. We're taking the skill game out of a $10000-$12000 machine and putting it in a box that can retail for $500-$600. In to recreate the physical pinball, which would be expensive and problematic to deliver, their machines have a large video screen that emulates the playing field in a partnership with Zen Pinball. We have developed an exclusive alliance with Zen Zen taking advantage of their ability to make content and our ability to make the hardware. We have haptic feedback so you can feel the knockers when you are playing the game. With within 10 seconds your eye and brain is tricked into thinking you are playing real gene pinball. Arcade1Up Pinball Andy Robertson Is a bold claim, especially for those of us (like me) who grew up playing many hours of physical pinball. But testing the Arcade1Up Zen pinball machine at the Toy Fair in New York, I was impressed by how realistic it felt. Although I've played video pinball before, Pinball Arcade on iPad being a favorite, having it housed in a real-looking pinball closet and being able to feel the click of the fins made all the difference. That extra bit of immersion by including the mechanics flipper and ball bumps from a real table makes your brain forget that this isn't actually a physical ball that's circling around the table. Also, because the video screen is placed behind the glass you get the same reflective look of a real pinball. Like they play pinball in a bar, you have to work around those reflections to see the ball. Again this adds a subtle later to realism. Arcade1Up Pinball Andy Robertson Each machine will have several tables. The Star Wars machine will have 10 different tables from Zen Pinball Star Wars. Williams Bally will have 12 different tables. I asked if the Addams family (my favorite childhood table) will be included in this package, but Scott confirmed it wouldn't be. Just like we did with recreational machines, there are some very complicated licensing deals, and we've had to build teams to deal with that side of the business. We have a whole team dedicated to Product Development alongside the License. It is this face of the business where Tastemakers has the best advantage and barrier to entry into its competitors. Being able to broker licensing agreements to make these physical machines a reality is something that a few years ago would have seemed possible. Add to this the attention to detail design and treatment of the product as a real replica and you have a strong recipe for success. Price is also a driver for families. At $500-$600 the Arcade1Up is distinguished from more expensive deals available from other video pinball makers. These competitors come in for many thousands of dollars and are not a home option. Checking out the King Pinball video makes you realize how many high-end options and design quality you're getting for your buck in the Arcade1Up. There are other cheaper options, such as the Toyshock pinball machine that comes in at around $400. But as the name suggests, this looks more like a toy than something that pinball fan would fade away. One thing the Toyshock pinball does really well is the virtual plunger, which I would like to see Arcade1Up consider including. Taking into account the that tasters have found for replica recreational machines that focus on quality rather than the amount of games, it seems likely that these video pinball machines will be another hot property are likely to be sold when they become available. As always, Bachrach still had much more to mock for upcoming ads, both in terms of confirming what tables would be including in the video pinball line, but also other areas that the Arcade1Up brand would address next. With arcade and pinball machines already made, it's less obvious what's left. Maybe we'll see air hockey, shuffle board or how about a jukebox replica Arcade1Up? Jukebox?
