Facebook messenger mobile web browser

On facebook's mobile website on my sister's phone, when you click on the Messages tab, it opens the Play Store for the first time that opens on the Messenger app (or opens Messenger if it is installed). If you click Back, the Messages page will appear correctly, but if you click a conversation that's happening like this -- the Store Playback will come up, but when you click Back, the appropriate conversation page will be uploaded to Chrome. Phone: G 3rd gen engine, Android 6.0.1 on my phone mobile website in Chrome works just fine -- there is a button that shows messenger installation, but I can normally browse and use messages. Phone: OnePlus 2, Android 5.1.1 (OxygenOS 2.2.1) Is there any way to prevent Facebook's website from trying to open the app? I definitely don't want to use any FB program. Details about what I've already tried: install and delete the default cleanup messenger and erase data for both Chrome and Messenger if you copy a link to the conversation page and open it on the new tab, it opens the page correctly (without jumping into the store game), so does it have a malicious script from your Facebook? Facebook messages are a great way to keep in touch with your friends, except for one thing. A few years ago Facebook separated messages from Facebook's main mobile app. So if you're on your phone and want to check for a new Facebook message, you can't--unless you're also Facebook Messenger installed. How do I go to facebook mobile site (m.facebook.com)? If you have a phone with web access m.facebook.com enter your web browser. On most phones, you can access the Internet browser from your phone's menu. To save time, you can add Facebook to your phone's tokens. Keep in mind that Facebook's mobile site is the version that works with most mobile browsers. Depending on your mobile browser, you may see a more basic version of the site. Alternatively, you can download one of Facebook's mobile apps. Let's face it, we're all paranoid about using the Facebook app on our iPhones. People see plenty of videos perpetuate a conspiracy theory about the stalker feature of the Facebook Messenger app here and here. Facebook has not done much to calm fears in the wake of continued concerns. If you still feel a little terrified after Zuckerberg's testimony in Congress this week, fear not, we have answers for how you can use Facebook without an app and avoid the consequences of imposing life altogether. Step 1: Uninstall facebook app and APPThis messenger is simple, but necessary Step. Don't worry, none of your content will be deleted. Step 2: Open Safari or Chrome on your PHONE instead of opening Facebook from an app, use the mobile version accessible through your phone's browser. Once opened, go www.facebook.com and log in. Make sure to bookmark the page for quick access. You can also put a mark-up icon on your home screen so closely emulate access using the App. Basically all the functionality accessible via the mobile version including advertising and page management. One thing I've noticed is that it doesn't seem to come through on mobile boom ads. There is not a big loss from the user experience. STEP 3: BOOKMARK THE FULL FACEBOOK SITEONE FROM DESCENDING INTO THE MOBILE BROWSER VERSION OF FACEBOOK IS THAT IT DOESN'T ALLOW YOU TO ACCESS MESSENGER. The best solution for how to access Facebook Messenger without an App is to use the full desktop version of Facebook. Go to for the full version. It's not mobile-friendly, but at least you'll be able to access and respond to any messages on Messenger.Step 4: Setting up notifications on FACEBOOKOne mobile from a few negative moves to using the mobile site is that it doesn't behave like the app and walk you through setting up notifications. However, you can go to account settings -> and adjust your settings for notifications in the update. Here are a few examples of how the mobile site and the full site look on safari on the iPhone.Other Facebook news from our blog:Facebook News Feed change Facebook photo link doesn't show why Facebook search suck? Update: I added some additional information to the end of this based on all the great comments from users. Be sure to read all the way to the end. Over the past few weeks, there has been a lot of stink over the fact that Facebook is dividing its messaging capability into a new Facebook messaging app. Some fear mongers have been spreading rumors that Facebook plans to use its camera and microphone to listen in on their private conversations, while Facebook has posted very clear messages that it has no intention of doing so. The result, however, has been quite a few conversations where friends and family have asked me if they should avoid installing the Messenger app and whether there are options for opening instant messages without using the app. The quick answer is yes... And it's too much. from what you think . There are a few changes to Messenger in the fact that there is a new app, but do you need it to view your Facebook messages? TL;DR -- For those who want a quick response without having to read the whole, you can read your Facebook Messenger messages by accessing Facebook via a browser, not the mobile app. When you move to Facebook in your browser, you can open Messenger from within the web view and read your messages. There is no specific Messenger login that you need and there are no specific messenger logins online. This is just the standard Facebook.com interface. Do we really think Facebook Spy is on us using the Messenger app? My response has been very simple. Even if it was true and Facebook was spying... Is your life really interesting to this? If you're worried about facebook listening to your conversations, you might need to think again about what activities you're engaged in. no... Facebook is not really interested in your rants during your kids playing football. Surprise... They don't want to hear that you use ping terms, strategize and leverage at your corporate meetings. Right... Facebook is not interested in any of your embarrassing bath noises while you play candy crash saga in the toilet. Believe it or not, Facebook doesn't care if you're playing Candy Crash Saga on the toilet. Click to hate Tweett to be a bad news carrier, but installing the Messenger app is going to place your privacy at any greater risk than the already embarrassing photos and wow I'm putting you on Facebook yourself. So calm down, don't believe me. Just calm down. Facebook Messenger does not represent the end of our personal privacy Instalng Facebook Messenger end of your privacy... Unless we will. You can still use the phone to contact people. You can still text. If you choose to use Facebook Messenger, great! It's a lesser communication channel that you need to check while you're sitting in the stop light keeping each other in line when the light gets green and you're fixed on your phone. [stop that, people!!] But if you don't believe me and you need your Facebook messages, however creepy that adding it to your phone requires you to wear foil hats for the rest of your life so that Facebook doesn't steal your thoughts, then here are instructions on how to get them. Note: No... It's not optimal. Yeah, it's kind of a clady... But if you want the best experience, simply install the app and get over it. View Facebook messages on your mobile device or tablet without using Facebook's Chrome AppInstall on your device. If you are an Android user, it's already on your phone. Open Chrome and (not yet signed in) the context menu within Chrome and check the box next to it Desktop SiteReload the page and you should see the Facebook.com desktop site. log in. To see messages and reply to them, click the message link in the left nav below your profile picture. You can still view your Facebook messages on your mobile device by viewing the desktop version of Facebook in your mobile browser. Just be sure to use the desktop site request feature in Chrome to make sure you see the Desktop version of Facebook, not the mobile version. Again, not the best user experience, but it gets you to your messages without ever having to bow to the privacy of Facebook and your desire that you download your second, standalone Facebook Messenger app. If you don't want to install the Messenger app, you can still view your Facebook messages on your mobile device. Click to TweetExcept for the fact that you basically gave away all privacy expectations when you agreed to the terms of Facebook use by creating your own account. oh yes... those little details . Hopefully this will help. I also hope this gets zero traffic because people are not silly enough to google how I can view my Facebook messages on my phone without installing the Messenger app. We'll see.... Cheers!--SeanUpdate -- I'm surprised by the response to this... And I'm sorry I was a roaring SOB Wow... just wow . First let me apologize to my readers for the high level of Snark in this. I probably went on the ship a little bit and Ily would have adsuring people, excuse me. not my intentions . Second, I can't believe this traffic is being generated. That means to me that there are many real, legitimate reasons that people want to view Facebook Messenger messages without installing the mobile app. If you read the comments below, you'll see that my readers (once again) have done a great job chiming in and sharing their reasons. Some of them include PrivacyNot wanting to give away all your private information, although I don't see how viewing messages in the desktop version versus the mobile app makes any difference to that front. Facebook still has all your messages and can still read them regardless of the platform. Resources, mostly storage on your phone this one is incredibly authentic. In my Samsung Galaxy, the Facebook Messenger app is a bloated whale in an app. The current version of this program takes 408 MB of storage. That's nearly half a gig of storage for a single program. By comparison, what messaging app only takes up to 19MB of storage and is a very similar type of messaging app. If you're in short storage or your phone doesn't allow you to move apps to your SD card, I can see why you would be unhappy with Messenger. A loathe chat apps if you hate chat apps, then you should like the fact that Facebook splits Messenger so you don't have to install it. I'll take it perfectly. LifeAgain battery is a very fair and authentic point. Now, instead of a For Facebook messages, you two. Two apps basically perform a very similar function in a similar app can really impact your battery life. Solution? Look at the settings of both Facebook and Messenger apps and adjust how frequent apps are in search of new messages or data. Consuming any unlimited data in your mobile plan, I'll get it. But in the single Facebook app that included Messenger, you had no choice but to get messages on your phone. You either installed the Facebook app and took the messages, or you didn't install the app and you didn't have anything. By splitting Facebook App and Facebook Messenger, you can save data by choosing not to install the Messenger app. For those who want the best of both worlds, Facebook even includes a data shielding feature in Messenger to reduce the amount of data the app uses by automatically downloading images and videos. To access the Data Saver feature, open Facebook Messenger and then click your profile photo. There should be a Data Saver menu item in the options that appear. The Facebook Messenger Data Saver feature can limit the automatic download of images and videos of Facebook Messenger App Crasht better, but in the beginning, Messenger is a hulking piece of $hit. I definitely expect more from Facebook (which I probably shouldn't). I feel a lot more stable, so maybe it worked. There is, as long as they try to add more ☺So, you get it. Apologies and updates. Just like any other human blogger out there, I sometimes let my opinion and snark get in the way of the fact that my goal is to actually help folks navigate social media. If my sarcasm was on its way to do it, excuse me. But keep big comments coming. I can get the criticism, it's okay ☺ just show you that I'm trying not to take myself too seriously, here I am with my foil hat. Yes, I understand that it will now live on the Internet forever. I try to take myself too seriouslyCheers!–SeanShare this with pins! [Updated 2020] View Facebook messages without installing Messenger app was last modified: July 25, 2020 by snicholson snicholson
