Catbird nyc rings

One of our favorite Meghan Markle rings, it's simple, classic, elegant... Just like MM itself! The Catbird NYC ring (seen below on Meghan's index finger) is the perfect way to build the perfect Thin ring beam as a whisper... shiny as linen hair. There's barely any... shimmering and delicate. Lightly nailed, solid 14k gold. Solid 14k yellow gold list is for one ring .5mm wide available in sizes 4 - 9 We found that JavaScript is disabled in this browser. I live in the UK so it would be quite a risk to buy one without being 100% safe because they do not return overseas purchases. I'd get a matching gold v shaped wedding band to sit underneath. We already have half the wedding planned and I still don't have an engagement ring! People find this really funny, but I'm so hesitant! All pictures (or duplicate ring styles) will be so useful! Page 2 13 comments We bought our wedding bands from Catbird and i They were SO HAPPY! I adore this place and I was so happy that we were able to support them – they really align with our political views and I found it to be super modern, unlike what some r... ing buying experiences to be like. I really, really wanted to support local jewelers (we live in Brooklyn), a women-owned business and a business that is invested in sustainability (in an otherwise awful diamond industry)! I originally visited Catbird's bridal annex to find an engagement ring and found a jeweler through them where I found the engagement ring of my antique/vintage/nontraditional dreams (Digby & Iona, for reference). However, Catbird also sells this brand - it just didn't carry exactly the vision for my engagement ring. The overdue both times was super easy. I thought the engagement ring meeting was beautiful and individualized/personalized. We were one of two couples inside and she didn't rush us. The wedding band meeting was definitely hectic. I didn't find that we got so much personalized attention even though we had a meeting, and I had to wait a while to get students' attention - I think they were overbooked. I would just recommend that they break down terms, since people choose between Catbird and in some cases large, faceless traders who don't care about sustainability (and I want more people to support companies like Catbird!). Another great thing about Catbird is that they carry a wide range of styles and prices, and we appreciated it as we were budget limited (and I'm very picky). We ended up with two bands made by Catbird that fit our budget (for reference, my husband's gold, the round band was about $1,000, and mine was a thing, a simple twisted gold ring about $250 - which went perfectly with my ornate/antique engagement ring!). All in all, it would be very recommended - please go support this amazing, modern, badass business that is trailblazing the wedding industry! Industry!
