George Turner's sketch summary is a popular columnist for a best-selling Sydney newspaper, writing a weekly column that he insists should be exactly 800 words. After his wife's death, he was buying a new home (via the internet and unseen) in a small (imaginative) New Zealand seaside town called Weld, where his parents took him on holiday as a child. She then has to break the news to her two teenage children Shay and Arlo. But the colorful and curious locals in Weld ensure Turner's dream of a fresh start isn't exactly up to plan. [1] The production of the series was first announced on October 29, 2014 with highlights from Channel Seven 2015. He liked seven scripts from the start, and we're excited that the project is underway. South Pacific Pictures CEO Kelly Martin said. This enables South Pacific Pictures to expand our horizons and open it up some great opportunities for our local cast and crew. [3] From the tone of the series, the head of Program Seven, Tim Ross stated: If you think the show has a bit of the same feel and vibe as packed into the Rafter's, you're dead right- and we have no apologies for that. [4] Filming for the series began on March 2, 2015. [1] On October 19, 2015, Channel Seven and South Pacific Pictures extended the show for a second season. [5] It was first screened in Australia on August 23, 2016. [6] On January 24, 2017, Channel Seven announced that the series had been renewed for a third season. [7] From September 12, 2017, it was screened with a mid-season finale after eight episodes. [9] On August 17, 2018, The Seven Network canceled the series after three seasons.
