Parks and recreation special 2020 australia

(CNN) - It makes a lot of sense that Leslie Knope, the fictional person best known for looking after his friends, would also have all our backs during the coronavirus pandemic. At least, that's what it felt like watching A Parks and Recreation Special, a half-hour reunion organized in favor of Feeding America. The episode, broadcast Thursday night, centered on Leslie's efforts to hold a phone tree going among her former Pawnee colleagues who all self-distanced and stayed at home. Parks and recreation. (Nbc) What the viewers found was a group of people who represented essentially all kinds of quarantine personality. It was Ben (Adam Scott), who was going to str crazy and plot a script for a film based on his board game Cones of Dunshire. There was Ron (Nick Offerman), who didn't like being around people anyway and had no trouble doing it. It was Chris (Rob Lowe) and Ann (Rashida Jones), who were apart because Ann was working as a nurse again and stayed away from her husband and children by living in the southeast part of their house. (One of the night's best jokes had Ann boast that her health-conscious husband is so healthy his blood shares rare qualities only seen in two other devices - Megan Rapinoe and a panther at the Miami Zoo.) It was Tom (Aziz Ansari) and Donna (Retta), the duo responsible for the all-important Treat Yo Self concept-turned-meme, who spent most of their time drinking in front of a sunny beach video chat background. It was April (Aubrey Plaza), who dressed up in the morning by taking four random items from a bag filled with all her clothes. It was Andy (Chris Pratt), who was divorced from April because he accidentally locked himself in their shed. It was Garry/Jerry (Jim O'Heir), who had several tech failures during his attempt to call. It was Jean-Ralphio (Ben Schwartz), who was all alone and bought a TV commercial to plead with viewers for human contact. (Please call me. I'm very sad.) Parks and recreation virtual reunion. (YouTube) And then there was Joan Callamezzo (Mo Collins), one of several surprise guest stars (others included Paul Rudd, Jon Glaser and Jay Jackson.) She interviewed Leslie and Ben in a segment from her home, where she had collected a collection of dolls to be her audience. Joan didn't do well. If she was honest, neither was Leslie. Despite seeming to thrive off the conversation to serve others (so much so that her normal four nights of sleep had been reduced to two), Leslie began to feel the stress of keeping an eye on those she loved. That's when Ron went in and organized a video call with each person on the phone tree at the same time - something Leslie had expressed missing. I called your friends and said you needed some help. They cleared their schedules, he said. She was moved. Leslie, don't use your time looking for other people, Ron added. Take care of yourself occasionally. Parks and recreation thrown. (Nbc) True to the friendship that had been formed on the show over seven seasons, Ron knew what Leslie needed without her having to say it. And maybe the viewers needed this. When it was on the air, Parks and Recreation shone like a comedy in that it was led by a character who at her core led with her heart and believed in the power of believing in others. She reminded us that it was okay to live with real, corny positivity. Bringing Leslie and other beloved Pawnee-ites back for a night probably fed some laugh-hungry souls and, with a little luck, will feed a lot of people. The episode, which ended by referring people to the Feeding America website and The National Institute of Mental Health, will be available for streaming on Friday on the NBC app Hulu, Peacock and YouTube. Just a few weeks ago, when we wanted comedies to watch, we noted an important fact: that Parks and Recreation's Leslie Knope knows how to deal with herself in a pandemic. She's already done it once, in a fifth season episode of the beloved sitcom - and while the show came to an end in 2015, viewers are about to see how the Pawnee, Indiana resident copes with coronavirus. In a one-off special to raise money for the US charity Feeding America, the actors of Parks and Recreation are reunited to tackle COVID-19. And more importantly, they will show the world how their beloved characters govern at the moment. By adding another scripted installment to the series, the show's stars will resume their alter egos on screen, thanks to a brand new episode that follows Leslie's (Amy Poehler) efforts to stay in touch with their friends while everyone is social distancing. The whole gang will be back, including not only Poehler as Leslie and her Making It co-host Nick Offerman as Ron Swanson, but Aubrey Plaza as April Ludgate-Dwyer, Chris Pratt as Andy Dwyer, Aziz Ansari as Tom Haverford, Adam Scott as Ben Wyatt, Jim O'Heir as Jerry/Garry/Larry/Terry Gergich and Retta as Donna Meagle. Although Rashida Jones' Ann Perkins and Rob Lowe's Chris Traeger left the show halfway through their sixth season, they will also be back, reports Variety - and you can also expect some other as yet undisguised guest stars from the show's original run as well. Leslie Knope wants to let you in on a secret... April 30 #ParksAndRec back to NBC for A Parks and Recreation Special. Come with us! pic.twitter.com/ZId6Lq3rkJ - Parks and Recreation (@parksandrecnbc) April 23, 2020 As Poehler reveals in the video above announcing the news, everything was filmed individually from each cast member's home. This means that when this Rec special hits US screens on Thursday, April 30 (with an airdate Down Under yet to be announced), it will look a little different than the show's regular episodes. Of course, no Parks fan will mind. In fact, if you fall into that category, a new episode is literally the best news you can receive right now - so start making waffles, collecting all the bacon and eggs you have, and make sure you have plenty of whiskey on hand. A Parks and Recreation Special airs on Thursday, April 30 in the United States. There is no word yet on screening details Down Under, but we will update you when they come to hand. Via Variety. Posted on April 24, 2020 by Sarah Ward Cast of Parks & Recreation will reunite in a special benefit Feeding America COVID-19 Response Fund. Amy Poehler, Rashida Jones, Aziz Ansari, Nick Offerman, Aubrey Plaza, Chris Pratt, Adam Scott, Rob Lowe, Jim O'Heir and Retta all return, five years after the series ended. The story sees Pawnee's most dedicated civil servant, Leslie Knope (Poehler), determined to stay in touch with her friends at a time of social distancing. Like many other people, we were looking for ways to help and felt that bringing these characters back for a night could raise some money, said executive producer Michael Schur. I sent a hopeful email to the actors, and they all came back to me within 45 minutes. Our old Parks and Rec team has put together another 30-minute piece of (quarantined) Pawnee life, and we hope everyone enjoys it. And donate! In such uncertain times, we can't think of anyone better than Leslie Knope to unite our country with its unbridled enthusiasm and compassion, said Lisa Katz and Tracey Pakosta, co-presidents of Scripted Programming, NBC Entertainment. A big thank you to Mike Schur and the actors of Parks & Recreation for putting this wonderful special together and bringing a smile to all our faces while raising money for such a worthy cause. No words yet if this will appear in Australia. Source: Deadline Next Post » « Previous post Your favorite troupe of dysfunctional local bureaucrats is back. The original cast of the beloved American sitcom Parks and Recreation, including Amy Poehler, Rashida Jones, Chris Pratt and Aziz Ansari, will reprise their roles for a 30-minute coronavirus special. Here's what we know. The park department will work from home! The new episode will be filmed inside each of the actors' houses. When it comes to plot, we only know that Pawnee, Indiana, civil servant Leslie Knope (Poehler), head of the local park department, is trying to stay in touch with friends and colleagues during these times of social distancing. If that is the case ... it will not be the first time the show has treated infectious diseases. In season three, a bad flu ripped through Pawnee and Tom Haverford (Ansari) practiced a pretty form of hygiene etiquette. Tom Tom (Aziz Ansari) fog himself with hand sanitizer after Leslie gets sick. (YouTube) The new episode, which will air in the U.S. on June 30, will air on June 30. There's no competition. But if it was ... we would easily win. It's not clear where to watch it! The series, which ended in 2015, is available to Australians who have accounts with streaming services Amazon Prime Video, Foxtel or Stan. Stan said it was not ready at this stage of plans for the special in Australia, while a spokesperson for Amazon Prime Video said it would not get to the platform. We are waiting to hear back from Foxtel. The special may be available as an on-demand rental through platforms like Apple TV. Like many other people, we were looking for ways to help and felt that bringing these characters back for a night could raise some money, executive producer and series co-creator Michael Schur said in a statement. I sent a hopeful email to the actors, and they all came back to me within 45 minutes. Our old Parks and Rec team has put together a more 30-minute piece of (quarantined) Pawnee's life, and we hope everyone enjoys it. And donate! Fans are understandably pumped! This news has, not surprisingly, been well received by Parks and Rec stop>Loading>Loading Parks and Rec were nominated for 14 Emmys in its time, including twice for Outstanding Comedy Series, but surprisingly - in an Emmys snubs like rivals The Wire - never won anything. Pratt and Parks and Rec author Megan Amram hope this is their chance to put things right. You get another episode @nbcparcsandrec on April 30th on NBC. People in need get help. And we finally get that Emmy, Pratt wrote. That's how this works? Posted 24 Apr/April 2020/Friday 24 Apr/April 2020 at 6:02am, Updated 24 Apr/April 2020/Friday 24 Apr/April 2020 at 6:58am 6:58am
