Let's talk about the indicator, which I rarely, if at all, let's see. I'm just bringing it up because others have discussed it quite often in recent days. This is a percentage of the S&amp;P 500 stocks trading along their 200-day moving average. You can see it's just a smidgen over the peak of January because it's kissing 90% now. I see a lot of citing it as very bullish, so I went back to have a look at the last time it had gotten this high. It was mid-2014. The image in 2014 looks quite different, because in the spring this index was so much on everyone and back and churning. In other words, it was slowly going to this 90% of the territory, which is not the case at present. In 2014, between the beginning of February and July had to go from 60% to 90%. In 2020, it has fallen from 60% to 90% in a few weeks. Now look at the chart of the Russell 2000 Foundation (IWM) because we know that high levels or participation are associated with a strong move with small caps. I figured there would be some warning like moving to 90%, then IWM would back off and rally again and we'd see a lower high percentage of stocks over their 200-day moving average line. But that wasn't the case. Not in 2014. The little hats just fell off a cliff. I also remembered that oil stocks were loved back then. This might be the last time they were truly loved with a small save rally in early 2016. Here's what I found interesting. If we use the Energy Select Sector SPDR Fund (XLE), we see that it peaked in June and as the stock percentage above their 200-day sliding average line was peaking, XLE was making it lower high. In any case, this is just one example of where this figure has gotten so extreme, but I think that's what it's to confirm what I said since midweek last week: the market has been overbought. I have added that there is a high level of complacency as well, which you do not see in this chart. My Oscillator is still relatively high, but at least it will eventually roll over to work on overbought-ness. I was pretty surprised to see Investors Intelligence bulls don't tick more than 60%, but rather be just shy at 59.6%. The Bears lost a little more than full point and now have 18.2%. It still shows too much bullishness in my opinion. So I still think we need to see a pullback – probably in small hats – to work on that overbought reading and high level of complacency. It's possible we just chop sideways, but downwards tend to shake out complacency better. The phrase Number Game hit Twitter's Top 10 Trends list in the US this afternoon, causing many to ask... Some Tweets claim the range is 1-150, while some others go 1-500. As long as the range is at least as high as your number of followers it should work. No one who Person A State of Tweetwill know that 42, 113, and 9 are personal B, C, and D. B, C, and D could just as easily find out A view privately in the direct message. Person A is the only one who receives remuneration for a private exchange of views publicly. Personal B, C, and D stand rewarded with confidence encouraging compliments. Because the results of the game are anonymous, there is no risky public shame. Rumor has it, the number of the game started on Facebook before going to Twitter. There are some fragmentary Facebook groups in Number Game related below. Even though some of the more negative posts seem to stand out more (ALL CAPS IS EXTREME!!!) the overall sentiment is mostly neutral. Keep up with the latest daily buzz with the BuzzFeed Daily newsletter! Knowing the numbers for some of the key risk factors is good for your heart and overall health. Between PIN automatic cash registers, website passwords, and programmable car locks, you may no longer need more numbers to remember. Every so often, though, it makes sense to match up to some that can help you track down and even improve your health. I'm not going to sleep, deciding to review the Impossible game for the iPhone was not an easy decision because, well, it's almost impossible! I'm embarrassed to admit that I haven't even made it past the first level, yet. But despite the fact that I'm still having fun and am totally addicted. That's why I've decided Impossible Game is worth a review. Impossible Game is a side scrolling platformer and was the best-selling Xbox Live Indie Game. You can compare it to the popular rhythm-based action platform Bit Trip Runner. Part of what makes the Impossible game so difficult is that when you die, you instantly respawn at the beginning of the level. If you want to practice a specific section of a level, you can drop the flag as a checkpoint to go into practice mode, but you still won't get credit to complete the level until you've played the entire level without dying. In impossible game, you control the square as it scrolls through the screen. You can perform one action with this square - jump. One touch anywhere on the screen will make your block jump, and if you hold your finger, it will continuously jump until you release. Any small error, such as landing on a spires (triangle) or dark area, will cause immediate death and respawn at the early level. One of my favorite features of Impossible Game is not only its incredibly simplistic design, but music. Music and Impossible Game were literally made for each other and you should never play this game without the official game music. For example, often times the time your jumps are the rhythm of the music and as the level becomes more intense, so is the music. Seriously, the music that is paired with Impossible Game adds a significant amount to the overall experience. Good Lives to its name Addicting No load at a time after not having a level of Amazing music bad makes me as a loser, following how many attempts I had in the bottom line of Impossible game is seriously incredibly exciting and wickedly difficult game with surprisingly perfect music to go along with it. Even if the game is hard and requires some memorizing skills, Impossible Game is a very fun really good time killer – maybe too good at killing time. $0.99 – Download Now We can earn commission purchases through our links. To learn more. In the early 1950s, many people believed that people could not run a mile in less than four minutes. Runners had been trying to break the four-minute barrier since the late 1800s. The world's top coaches and most gifted athletes were trying to go sub-4:00 years ago. They were devoted, and they tried all sorts of training plans, but the milestone was considered unreachable – that the human body just couldn't go that fast. Then in 1954 Roger Bannister ran a mile for 3 minutes 59.4 seconds. A month and a half later, John Landy ran even faster. Then, a year later, three more runners broke the 4-minute barrier. Today high school runners break the barrier regularly, and Hicham El Guerrouj of Morocco holds the record for the world's fastest mile at 3 minutes and 43.13 seconds. Here are four things to keep in mind to make impossible:1. Your negative beliefs are strong. If you believe that something is impossible, that belief will undermine your trust and turn this impossible faith into a self-fulfilling prophecy.2. Positive views are even stronger. If you believe you can and will do something, you will find the means to make it happen. Proof look at our history: Imagine how the world would be if U.S. President John F. Kennedy felt it was impossible to put a man on the moon. What if Martin Luther King Jr. believed that it was impossible to achieve civil rights in the United States or if Mahatma Gandhi had believed that it was impossible to overthrow the British occupation of India without violence. Would Barack Obama have become the first African-American president of the United States state if he'd thought the quest was impossible? Unlikely.3. Authority figures don't always know best. If a person with authority tells you that you can't do something, you'll probably believe it or at least have less confidence in your abilities. And when you believe it, you behave as if this prognosis is true, by default making it come true. For example, if I told the patient: You're a mess. You have no hope, this can lead to the patient stopping trying, although it really is hope.4. Believe what is possible. This is the first step towards fearlessly achieving the goals. Fearlessness is a state of mind, not a genetic trait. You can buy it and strengthen it. Start building your courage now by reminding yourself of all the amazing feats you have in your life. Perhaps you may already have been able to do it several times in your life. What have you already done that you once thought could never be done? Write it down. Keep this list handy and read it when you are tempted to believe that you don't have what it takes to start making changes in your life. Whoa! Season 7 of Game of Thrones blew our minds and we can't wait for Season 8 to get here. HBO (TWX) seems to spend so much on each episode that it seems to have more money than Iron Bank. But it pays off, with the first episode this season receiving a record-setting 10.1 million viewers, according to AP. As you impatiently expect what is expected to be last season, see how much you know about the numbers behind the show's success.
