Honda odyssey transmission fluid change or flush

Pump the vacuum tank of the transmission fluid pump with 30 to 50 strokes of latch and plunger on the tanked vinyl hose. Photo 3: Release the fluid latch on to the hose and wait while the vacuum pulls out the old fluid. Photo 4: Refill fluid with new fluids on the tank to refill the amount of fluid you withdrew and refill the transmission with that amount of new fluid. Follow the photo series for full step-by-step instructions. Car makers have made major improvements in transmission fluids over the past two years. Contact the dealership parts department to see if your car requires a new fluid. Then auto parts store calls until you find the one that stocks it. If you strike out, cut the pill and buy it from the dealer. Video: How to check transmission fluidic muscoplat, editor of Family Handyman, will tell you how to check your transmission fluid to prevent damage to your transmission in our video tutorial. Make sure you are not driving around with low transmission fluids. The tools required for this project require a special fluid pump. Also, wear plastic gloves. Tony Bee/Taxi/Getty Images Lifehacker recommends testing the transmission fluids of a car monthly. To do this, take out the dipstick, wipe the fluid, and put the dipstick back in. Remove the dipstick again, and observe the quality of the fluid. With transmission fluid, the level should never decrease, since the fluid is part of a closed system. If it's short, Lifehacker suggests taking the car to a mechanic. When examining transmission fluids, focus on the quality of the fluid. Red color is the normal color. Liquids that are brown or smell burned need to be replaced. Generally, depending on make and model, replacement is recommended every 50,000 to 100,000 miles. to forge.
