That is why it is crucial for you to complete the information on this form for each member of your household. Then distribute copies to each member of your home. Also, post all copies over the phone and in easy-to-find places at home, car or work. Be sure to update your information often. In make copies for nosident relatives, nannies, caregivers, neighbours, teachers, anyone who has contact with you or who is periodically responsible for your children (or anyone with disabilities or the elderly in your home). If you own a mobile phone, put two different contacts on the phone under ICE for emergency, so emergency staff can call your contacts in case you can't communicate. Some examples could be ICE-mom or ICE-marit to identify your contact. Newer smartphones have apps you can download to facilitate access to this information. Don't trust your smartphone as it may be out of power, overlooked or not with you at the moment. It is still critical to have additional copies of this form. Emergency telephone numbers 9-1-1 (new, one, one) Emergency transport system (if the 9-1-1 system is not available in your area) __ The locator number of the national poison control center without tolls is: 800-222-1222. From here, you'll be automatically redirected to the Poison Center closest to your area. What about your ex? Use this printable child's emergency contact form to ensure that anyone caring for your children, from school staff to neighbours, family and friends, can reach you both at a time of notice. Share copies with your children's nannies, and remember to post a copy on a prominent site at home, too. In this way there will be no doubt about who to contact in case of emergency. The problem with most emergency contact forms is that there is not enough room for contact information from both parents, including home addresses, phone numbers and work information. That's why the child's emergency Here it includes: Full contact information for your child's doctor and dentist, up to three additional ContactsSpace to record your family's visit and work schedules Directions to use your child's emergency contact form Print your child's emergency contact form. Note: The form is in PDF format. You can download Adobe Acrobat Reader if your computer is not configured to read PDF documents. Fill in your details. Be sure to include your mobile phone and work numbers. Add your ex's information. Add contact information for other adults in your child's life, such as local grandparents, aunts, uncles, and nearby neighbors who might care for your child in case of an emergency. Make as many copies as you need. Save an extra to post in the fridge to make it accessible to nannies and their children. Distribute copies to every person who cares about their children. Update the form and distribute new copies each time the contact (or ex) information changes due to a new mobile phone number, new job, or move. Do I really need to use a form like this? Yes. Being prepared for an emergency means being prepared for the unexpected. Even if you are normally with your children 24/7, you should distribute updated copies of this emergency contact form to anyone who potentially cares about their children if they were sick or out of town. Who should have a copy of the form? Anyone and everyone who cares about their children in their absence. This can include nannies, neighbors, school/daycare staff, family members, and all of their support childcare providers. Do I have to have the notarial form?No. Your form does not need to be notary because you are not using it to communicate your consent for medical treatment, as you would with a medical release form. Do my ex and I have to agree on what appears on this form?No. The form lists each of your phone numbers, information about parents' schedules and phone numbers for your children's pediatrician, dentist, and school/childcare. How many phone numbers should I include? You have to include all the numbers where you can reach both parents. Overall, this would include your home, work and mobile phone numbers. There is also space on the form to include additional phone numbers, such as friends and neighbors who rely on an emergency. How often do I need to update my emergency contact form? Review the emergency contact form once a year and update it every time the information changes. For example, if your ex a new job, print new copies of the form so you can update your contact information accordingly. The Summary screen displays a list of emergency contact entries.
