Aeroplane wallpaper cell phone

On the complexity of the cubic inch scale, mobile phones are some of the most sophisticated devices people use every day. Modern cell phones can process millions of calculations per second in order to compress and disconnect the voice stream. Once you've read How Cell Phones Work, you know they can transmit and receive hundreds of FM channels by exchanging channels in sync with base stations when the phone moves between cells. If you ever take a mobile phone apart you will find that it contains only a few individual parts: microscopic microphoneA speakerAn LCD or plasma displayA keyboard is no different from the one we saw on the TV remote controlAn antennaA batteryAn amazing circuit board that contains courage on the phone A circuit board is the heart of the system. Here is one typical Ericsson mobile phone: In this picture, several components have been identified. From the left you can see analog-to-digital and digital-analog conversion chips. Learn more about A-to-D and D-to-A conversion and its importance for digital audio how CDs work. DSP is a digital signal processor - a highly customized processor designed to perform signal manipulation calculations at high speed. This DSP is rated at about 40 MIPS (Millions of instructions per second) and handles all signal compression and decompression. The microprocessor (Ericsson phones use the ASIC version of the Z-80) and memory handle all household chores on the keyboard and screen, deal with command and control alarm system with the base station and also coordinate the remaining functions of the board. Rf and power component deals with power management and charging and also handles hundreds of FM channels. Finally, radio frequency (radio frequency) amplifiers handle signals on and off the antenna. What's amazing is that this whole feature - which just 30 years ago would have filled the entire office building floor - now fits a package that sits comfortably in your palm.
