Dressed in a Victorian-era wedding dress, a doll that is being described as possessed and haunted by its (very) frightened owners is giving Chucky a run for her money. Apparently, the doll only married men - since she has been active, the bridezilla has allegedly turned to Cameron Merrick, the husband of its original owner, Debbie Merrick, and Paul Steer, the married father of its current owner, Lee Steer, 30 (who boasts of the title of paranormal investigator). Also on your list of paranormal compliments? Removing your own necklace and setting fire alarms. Talk about a scorned woman. Lee acquired the doll for more than $1,000 after waged an international bidding war on eBay. It makes sense - I guess a lot of people just wanted to be attacked by a possessed doll, you know? Lee claims that after two days in his new home, the doll somehow scratched his father's arms (even though he and the doll were on different floors of the house) while watching his son's paranormal broadcast live. He was watching the replay of one of our live replays with the doll. I was doing a live broadcast upstairs in my room, Steer told the Daily Mail. Then he told my mother: My arm is hurting. He raised his sleeve and had six scratches on his arm. This content is imported from Twitter. Steer has also reported unexplained noises, broken objects and power outages. Using a random word app, the technology that paranormal activity enthusiasts believe spirits can hack (ghosts are also computer geniuses, didn't you know?), Steer said he even discovered his name. Ladies and gentlemen, meet Samantha. Sounds like a real winner, doesn't it? Steer said that after losing [his] faith in occultism, Samantha came to help him back in the dark. He now sleeps with her by his bed in the hope that he will catch her into action. His unusual behavior, specifically his revenge against married men, also inspired Steer to do some research - he discovered that Samantha is in fact in America and was, in her time (unclear what this deadline is, however) traditionally given as a gift to boyfriends. As far as wedding gifts go, this is a pretty horrible gift. We're all up for a good ghost story, but debunking them is more fun. A quick search for dolls as wedding gifts, produces almost nothing (sorry, Lee!), except for a few cultural customs that in no way involve an American-made doll that looks like it was manufactured in the last 30 years. Case closed. I still wouldn't want her within a 10-mile radius of me, though. This content is imported from Twitter. You may be able to find the same content in another format or you may be able to more information on their website. We may not be believers, but Steer and his father won't be considering alternative explanations soon: My father is a believer. He said he's not happy with him being in the house. And they are the only ones. Actually, there is a whole psychic and paranormal category on eBay, where believers can buy and sell active items. There are many more Samanthas on the market, including this haunted clown, this spirited kid named Dakota and this 1940s doll who seems to have inspired a Tim Burton movie. You know, in case you were wondering (we really hope you weren't). In the 1990s and early 2000s children obsessed with their American dolls as if they were their own children. The parents drew big bucks, so their children could have the works of Felicity, Kirsten and Addy merch, from books to costumes. Looking back after all these years, it may have seemed like all this money was for nothing, but as it turns out the American Girl Dolls were all investment. A search on eBay shows that American girl dolls - if in good condition - are worth a nice penny. Just sign up for this Samantha White doll that goes for $595, along with her bedroom ensemble and clothing selection. Antiquities appraiser Lori Verderame, Ph.D., said today that dolls from the original American Girl Dolls manufacturer, Pleasant Company, may be worth more if they are in proper condition. The company was acquired by Mattel in 1998. Verderame also told the site that Mattel made dolls may be worth a good benefit also depending on the doll, the doll's age, accessories included, and the condition all these factors are in. RELATED: You'll never guess how many old polly pockets are worth on Ebay Naturally, just like any thrift element, offering good conditions, original packaging can go a long way in terms of adding extra value to the product. It seems that nostalgia never goes out of fashion, even in the form of human dolls. It may be time to dig through your parents' attic for an additional influx of cash.
