PRODUCT CATEGORIES Product highlights Our huge Nottingham drum and guitar shop was founded back in 1999 and has grown into one of the UK's largest independent music instrument stores. We meet players of all levels, so whether you're just starting out and looking for a starter drum kit, or a pro player buying a top line fender strat, we'll be happy to help! We stock various top brands including Pearl, Sabian, Fender, Mapex, Takamine, Gretsch, Paiste, and much more! Our new electronic drum department features a large selection of Yamaha DTX drums. We are also one of the leading suppliers of marching drums and percussion. If you're a drummer or guitarist looking for great deals and low prices on drums, percussion, or guitars, we can help! Now we have a house in Nottingham for sound and light rental, areas of No1 rental services for affordable PA, audio systems, backline and disco lighting rental. Let us add a little sparkle to your party with our professional light show! Kids disco parties speciality! 08-11-2017, 09:07 pm #1 I went to the guitar center to inquire about the set of drums. It seems that they only have access to certain sets from each brand. For example, ludwig's classics were only available in a certain configuration, such as a 22 bass drum and a stand of 12. (at least 4 pcs.). If I wanted a 16x 24 bass drum and a 14 rack that would be ordered as a custom from Ludwig and the price would be a rocket. Ludwig offers all those corresponding sizes, but the guitar center offers only certain sets. Is every store like this???? 08-11-2017, 10:02 PM #2 Almost every store I was in is like this. I am going to a long and mcquade here in Canada. In different configurations and finishing quantity only from one drum line can fill the entire warehouse. They usually have more popular sets in stock. I never bought drums from a music store though. On the other hand. Originally published as Rickthedrummer Is a smart life out there. The problem is, it's not here. -Mike 08-12-2017, 07:18 AM #3 I visited many moms and pop music stores and they were very just what they sold and usually cheap brands. I bought my kit online through LA Music from Toronto 12 years ago. Their inventory was huge and so were their choices. They sold me a kit for a 40% discount with free delivery. I buy music tools online. 08-12-2017, 04:21 PM #4 Originally published as Lexer went to the guitar center to inquire about the drum set. I think the current small volumes fashion is the main reason almost every store here is a great choice - but only if you want to fix it with 22 bass and 10, 12, 16 volumes or 20 bass with 10, 12, 14. or Jungle/Breakbeats/Martini set. Its the only major economy they will be the only stock sets they hope will sell soon. The closest set that I can think of in my dimensions is Ludwig Centennial who has a 24 x 16 bass, 13 x 10 and 16 and 18 floor ones. I think if you want a new set with a 14 rack volume you are screwed and the only route is a special reservation or custom build ... 08-12-2017, 5:09 pm #5 Crispy critters, thnaks! With 14 fixation is just me being too bonham. Lol I'll take 13x9. 08-12-2017, 10:02 pm #6 that I would look on-line. GC has more brands and models on its website than they do in their stores. You can always order on your website and have it sent to your local store for a pickup. There may even be free shipping in this way. The reason is; manufacturers are sensitive to distributors and/or territory. The local store can be restricted due to other stores on their territory. The site is based on country sales. It's all about distribution and marketing. -Brian Too crappy used to drum stuff into the list play song..... not drums!!! I think the feeling is much more important than the technique. It's all very well doing a triple paradiddle - but who will know you've done it? If you play technically you sound like everyone else. Like Sam Goody is selling ,, we beat that up.. then the Internet has arrived. I went online and on eBay to find good clothes that offered me good deals. I found lately that eBay has new AMS scanners on its website so people can't report off-ebay sales without getting banned. But I just picked up a phone call from people (like The Fork Drum Shop) and asked you to sell that Starclassic Sxxxx and got my Tama a good bit cheaper. I just got roland spd-sx and stand for a decent price by calling the store and we bargained If the store has only what you want, they can get a bargain, but they have limited options to waive prices unless motivated (e.g. car dealers). sellers). AM #9 that I paid a visit to my local GC to buy a drum head and found that the store had removed the drum section and used space to create music rooms to teach. Drums are now lined up on shelves high above the main floor without a special sale person next to any drum tools. The drum heads, which used to be behind the counter, are a type of wire rack and this is to find itself in the system. Gone are the floor demo models of acoustic sets and e-sets. The store was scurvy for any drums and it was eerily pretty. There are only two GC stores in my area (Sacramento) and there is quite a distance between the two. I wonder if brick-and-mortar stores have less stock because their online business is where most are out there shopping these days? I do almost my entire business through MF, which I like, although I understand that there is a GC family. If I shop locally it is because I find myself within Memphis for some reason, and I make it a point to buy something when I go to the Memphis Drum Shop. I envy you guys who are close to those iconic drum shops. I think Bentley's (sp?) The drum shop in Fresno (and I know you were there risky) is the biggest drum just to shop in the woods of my neck, but Fresno is over 1 1/2 hours! 2017-14-08, 12:45 #12 If for any reason you ever find yourself in Memphis, don't miss it. The same applies to forks in Nashville. It's hard for some people to believe that two of the coolest drum shops are in Tennessee..... but there is a ton of music history in that state. Retailers need to buy tools (from guitar axes to Neal Peart as size kits) just like any consumer. The only difference they get is a wholesale discount either directly from the manufacturer or distributor. Retailers usually pay 40%... then mark-up by msrp of each distributor (Production suggested retailer price)... so it could get very expensive to fill the shelves with everything and not really guarantee everything will sell 08-23-2017, 04:30 #14 Family owned music store where I has 90 days only in cash shipment deal with most major sellers. If the can sell goods up to a 90-day deadline to pay, they have already made some profits. If the item can not sell within 90 days, the stock piles and they begin to lose money. 08-24-2017, 11:16 am #15 pleasant masses impossible because we all have our desires and needs. That's why with my pork pie I went to the owner directly and he custom made my kit. I originally called the guitar center about different sizes and options and they couldn't do anything for me. These kits are never discounted, so she paid the full price and fees, and they were going to charge her a $70 shipping fee to send the kit to their store! I went back to them and questioned the shipping tax, which they said they could refuse. I'm also asked if they can do better on the price because I can get that price anywhere and online I can save more than $100 in sales tax. They said no, so I said exactly what you're proposing here? You don't have an item on the screen where I can try, you don't offer a better price, you want to charge a delivery to get an item in your store, you have to charge vat, why would anyone buy something here? They had no answer for that. I promptly canceled the order and bought it from a popular online music superstore - the same price, no fees, free shipping to my house. All right for you. We hope you like Ekit. I look at them, too. Signature here 08-24-2017, 02:11 PM #18 Originally published as Nubdrummer I said what are you offering here? One would have thought that the first thing a floor sales clerk would be taught is the answer to this exact question. I'm sure it comes up often. Do you not like the story with a happy ending? Dude Harry Miree loves them as well, but he's pro based in Nashville. 08-25-2017, 08:31 PM #20 THE SUBJECT OF VAT IS STATE-BY-STATE ISSUE, which the retailer really can't control. If there is a shop or tax collection agreement with your country in your country, they must provide a sales tax (whether they collect it or not). This is a huge price advantage (7%+) for the state's non-state business that ship across the country. In the end, and I predict soon, most states will impose tax collection policies on out-of-state retailers. By the age of the internet, it really wasn't a problem. Most cross-border sales were a producer retailer and are therefore exempt. -Brian Too crappy used to drum stuff into the list play song..... not drums!!!
