Modern sofa set design

Jump to main contentWe've heard it over and over again: Midcentury-modern trend is here to stay. The elegant silhouettes, bright woods and functional shapes used by designers in the 1950s and 60s have shifted from vintage merchants to mainstream culture, inspiring aesthetics everywhere from West Elm to IKEA. If you've jumped on the midcentury train, the good news is that there is no shortage of options for furniture; in fact, the choices can be a little overwhelming. To limit it (and to avoid knockoffs), AD has compiled some of our favorites in one place. From the original design of le Corbusier and Charlotte Perriand, to the midcentury-inspired forms of DwellStudio and on-the-rise Australian company SP01, there's a sofa (or even sectional) for every space and budget. Created by Dan Fogelman (Crazy, Stupid, Love), the show looks at how people's lives can be crossed in surprising ways. Series production designer Gary Frutkoff was brought on the creating worlds of the main characters, which vary not only in places ranging from Pittsburgh to Los Angeles, but also in time period. Along with his team, which includes set decorator Beth Wooke, art director Will Eliscu, and construction coordinator Gary Christensen, devised spaces that spoke to the characters and their lives. We're kind of movie theaters, Frutkoff says. If you look into someone's bedroom, you'll see a lot about them. The biggest challenge was to deal with the changes in eras. There are period TV shows, like Mad Men, but they are stable within their years. They choose a couple of years, and that's the context of history, he said. Ours, so far, has gone from 1980 to the present. Bouncing between time periods required quick thinking and a team that could find period-perfect props and locations. The different places have been challenging, he says. They must support history. The characters' lives and their emotional stories are always at the heart of the show's design. Scripts require different tones, he says. Happy tones, sad tones, dark tones, light tones. It is another element that we need to add to our ingredients, in our recipe. Frutkoff took AD on a tour of the homes of This is Us, from Rebecca and Jack's 1980 kitchen to Randall's contemporary living room.1/7Photo: Ron Batzdorff/NBCThe Pittsburgh home of Rebecca (Mandy Moore) and Jack (Milo Ventimiglia) seen in different eras and underwent the most changes in the series. The one we had to design from scratch, says This is Us set designer Gary Frutkoff. Creator Dan Fogelman was pretty intent on really coming down to a blue collar family home. Kyle Schuneman is set designer and small space designer for Bed Bath & amp; Beyond and author of The First Apartment Book: Cool Design for Small Spaces. He is also art director of Food Networks Giada at Home, and his work has been featured on NBC and HGTV. 1. Have your space tell your story. In set design, home is often the viewer's first introduction to the character. You have to pack a punch in a small space, Kyle says. It's my job to tell a rich story about the 'character' who lives in space. Your home should have the same effect: It should scream who you are and what you are about. Decorate it with pieces you collected in your travels, interesting items, and things that matter and tell your personal story. 2. Layer for depth. The key to a good set is that it has depth, says Kyle. Bad and cheap sets seem flat and dull, with little visual variance to attract the eye. Use the same principals in your home: A layer of space full of different textures is what makes a home feel rich, he says. Not only hang curtains, but also add Roman shades to the window to give the room depth, and mix woods, metals, and in a small space to keep the eye moving. 3. Lighting is the key. You can build a beautiful set, but if it's not illuminated properly, that's all for nothing, Kyle says. Don't rely on your lighting ceiling lights: A home must have multiple light sources to make everyone look good. The big secret to a well-lit home? Task lighting. Kyle recommends investing in a large floor lamp for reading — and also spreading mood lighting around the room, like table lamps. It's a great way to pay attention to certain areas while downplaying the areas you don't like that much or can't control, Kyle says. 4. Hide what you don't like. Creating a set may require converting an actual location into something completely different. We can shoot a coffee shop or loft in Los Angeles, but it's supposed to be on a busy street in New York, Kyle says. We bring in landscapes and backgrounds to change what the viewer looks like through the window. Don't you like your own view? Steal this trick by adding a movie to your window or using woven shades that let in light but filter the view. And if possible, Kyle recommends adding plants outside your window to camouflage an unattractive view. 5. Scale is everything. Be sure to balance your furniture and consider the room's proportion. When you're on set, sometimes you realize the furniture you took in the dwarfs model, or that the wall feels empty because the piece is too small. Be sure to consider the scale of the room before buying large furniture — or before adding too much small furniture. With a sofa, choose one that has a large seating area, but not bulky arms that take up unnecessary space, Kyle says. And if you are blessed with high ceilings, make a large gallery wall to improve the scale. For example, sending an invitation electronically is perfectly fine, just as it is no longer expected OSA by calling a house phone. It is also unusual for a host to serve food with fine porcelain, and it is also rare for partygoers to arrive in fine clothes. But still there are some things that will always be a cornerstone of hosting, and one of them is how to set the table properly. When at the helm of a dinner party—no matter how relaxed the setting or how intimately the company—it's worth having an appealing backdrop that shows the hard work of preparing an audience-pleasing meal. a tablescape is recording. While entertaining family and friends, it's important to create a warm and inviting atmosphere, says Bronwen Smith, owner and principal designer at B Floral. A well-designed table landscape will impress guests and set the mood for the night ahead. Just as a host should figure out how many people will attend and how much food to cook, Smith says it's just as necessary to consider a theme for the table and to set it up accordingly. We asked her to describe exactly how to set a table, and what to remember about its details. By keeping her tips in mind, you will be a modern host with timeless emotions. When you set the table properly, guests will notice the extra effort you took to make the event memorable, she said. Alicia Henderson Photography; DESIGN: B Floral Each tablescape is unique, so how you like to set the table depends on what kind of event you're hosting, Smith says. One of my favorite ideas for a dinner with friends is an elevated casual tablesetting. For this style you will need a plate, salad plate, soup bowl, napkin, water glass, wine glass, dinner knife, dinner fork and soup spoon. You can remove pieces like a soup bowl or a salad plate if you don't serve dishes that require them. Alicia Henderson Photography; DESIGN: B Floral Make sure you come prepared with all the items needed, Smith adds. It's never a good look for a tablesetting to be different from the rest. If you are unsure how many guests will make an appearance, have additional pieces on hand in case extra guests arrive. Alicia Henderson Photography; DESIGN: B Floral Start by placing the plate on the table, Smith adds. If you want, you can also add a charger under the plate, which is traditionally a larger plate than the one eaten on. But an out-of-the-box idea may include a banana blade or piece of driftwood. After, place the salad plate on top of the plate. Next, if you have a soup course, place the soup bowl on top of the salad plate, Smith continues. Place the napkin either to the left of the plate or on top of the plate. You don't have to stick to the traditional napkin placement if you want to switch it up. After, place the dinner fork to the left of the plate and the knife to the right of the plate, Smith adds. Then place the soup spoon to the right of the dinner knife. The water glass should go above the dinner knife, and finally the wine glass should be placed next to the water glass. Raise it slightly higher, and you're perfectly ready. It's the easiest — and yet true — way to set a table.
