For over 50 years, The People of Top Board has worked hard to provide Tip Top quality service and products to customer brands. View: Meat, Poultry and Seafood Companies that lister contaminated chicken from the Top Bird Council for some responsibility for a few recalls in the United States and Canada. And while the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in Atlanta has not yet said so that listeria-contaminated chicken is the likely source of an outbreak of the Listeria monocytogenes strain the CDC is investigating from until August 23. To date, no source of the listeria outbreak, which infected 24 people, hospitalized 22 people and resulted in two deaths in 13 states, was identified. More should be known about that outbreak, but Marietta, GA-based Tip Top Bird looks like the source. The family-owned, 72-year-old Board Top on September 28 - just nine days ago - recalled all cooked rather than deboned fowl meats he produced from January 22 to September 24. Other reviews were followed by Tip Top customers. Tip Top has manufacturing facilities in Marietta and Rockmart, GEORGIA, and New Market, Virginia. Announcing its recall, Tip Top released a statement to its valued partners, saying they would have received word from the CDC earlier this summer about the listeriosis outbreak. As part of this investigation, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Food Inspection Agency (CFIA) tested products to find the source of the outbreak. Investigators notified Tip Top on August 17. One of 10 samples of chicken products taken from the Manitoba Food Court returned a positive test for Listeria. We were shocked, saddened, and moved on to action when we found out about it, Type Top said in a statement to its customers. On August 23, CDC officials released an investigation notice to the public about the mysterious Listeria outbreak. She made no mention of the Tip test results, and does not call the poultry industry for any special consideration. Activities in The board's top production facility in Rockmart, Georgia, has become intense. Tip Top has hired a third-party sanitation firm to review and intensively clean up for its ready-to-eat cooking facility. The culinary line was closed for cleaning, which was completed on September 2. Tip Top at Rockmart Plant was 30 years old on September 25, the day the CFIA notified them of another positive test result showing Listeria. The CFIA soon notified the Top Board of three more positive tests for Listeria. At this point, the company put the products on its culinary line in Georgia on hold and decided the next day to recall production back in January. Council Top promises to scour the line to look for any potential root causes. In its only announcement of the listeria outbreak, the CDC said it has not identified a specific food item, grocery store, or restaurant chain as a source of infections. The CDC does not recommend that consumers avoid any particular food at this time. Restaurants and retailers are not advised to avoid serving or selling any particular meal. An August 23 statement from the CDC, however, acknowledged that the chicken was a suspected source. Public Health Canada is also investigating a Listeria outbreak in several Canadian provinces linked to diced chicken, a CDC report said. Sequencing of the entire genome showed that listeria type, making people sick in Canada, is closely related genetically to Listeria, making people sick in the United States, indicating a common route of exposure. Tip Top was originally a very small broiler processor. In the 1960s, feeling the pressure created by large, fully integrated broiler processors, Tip Top began to diversify through the processing of mature chickens and roosters. This transition was completed in 1976, when Tip Top stopped processing broilers and specialized in the processing of chicken and roosters-heavy-water, the mother stock of broilers. Today, Tip Top continues to be the dominant player in poultry production as the primary processor and marketer of cooked and raw poultry products.
