Start here Benefits of a National Park Senior Pass There are many unexpected benefits to your superior pass membership. Not only do you gain free entry to all national parks and federal recreation areas, but there are additional benefits as well. Travel companions also enter for free with your pass All owners and passengers in a vehicle are free (up to four adults) Camping, swimming, boat start and four fees waived at certain locations Covers all entrances and standard (daily use) leisure charges Discounts on certain recreational activities or programs Cost of a Senior Pass There are two different types of senior pass membership. One is a lifetime membership and the other is an annual membership. The cost for each is: $80 for a lifetime senior pass of $20 for an annual senior pass Lifetime membership can be used for the rest of your life without renewal necessary. It is also not affected by any price changes that may occur, as opposed to the annual pass. Although the price doesn't change often, it recently jumped to $80 for a lifetime membership in 2017. To protect against these changes, buying a pass life is a better investment for most older people. In addition to the above cost, there is a $10 cost for any passes purchased online or by mail. The only way to avoid this end is to buy your national park pass in person at a National Park location. How to get a senior pass to national parks If you're ready to get a senior pass for yourself, it's not always clear how to start this process. This is particularly true if Live near a National Park yourself. Follow these steps below to secure your own senior pass. Decide between an annual and a lifetime pass Your first step is to determine if you need an annual pass or a lifetime pass. There are benefits to both. Of course, the annual pass is less expensive. This makes it a good fit if you are not sure how much you will use the pass. If you are only planning to visit a handful of national parks or if you have under a year's worth of travel plans, save your money by choosing an annual pass. On the other hand, if you have many plans to see a variety of national parks across the country, consider a lifetime membership. Remember, an America's beautiful pass involves more than just national parks. Over 2,000 recreation areas are included, so you can discover that you have a lot of use of this passage, even in your own city. Ultimately, lifetime passing is a great long-term option where you don't have time to worry about price changes in the future. Step 2. Visit the person to buy The easiest (and least expensive) way to buy your senior pass is to visit a site in person. If you live near a federal recreation area, you can visit and request an application. This is something you usually process on the spot, so you could go home with your national park passed that day. To check if there is a location near you, review the full list of federal recreation sites that have the ability to issue passes. Not all website topics pass, so check before you leave the house. Make sure you have your identity so you can easily edit your application. Step 3. Fill out your application online or by mail If you don't have a location near you to buy, you can also get your pass online or by mail. As noted earlier, this includes an additional fee of $10 over the cost of the pass. You can purchase lifetime pass or annual pass online through the USGS online store. When you buy your pass online, you won't be able to download or print. Park reviews your application and sends you your pass. When you buy the past digitally, you'll upload your identity documents for proof of age and residence. If you prefer to buy your pass online, you can use this online application form. This is similar to the application used to record in person. You will need to post the form photocopy of your identity card. Acceptable IDs include a U.S. state driver's license, birth certificate, passport or green card. Similar to the online application, the park service mails pass you to you. Step 4. Use your pass Once you get your pass in the mail, it's time to start using it. Find some travel inspiration in retirement magazines, travel areas, and just by checking out your local parks. There is so much to see, so now is your chance to explore more of this wide and Country. Without the daily responsibility of a full-time job, many older people find a new passion for exploration in their golden years. A national park upper pass is the perfect way to complement this drive to see more. FAQs Because most people have no experience with the National Park passes before the senior pass, it's normal to have a few questions about what to expect. Here are some of the most common questions about a senior pass, as well as everything you need to know. Where can you use your pass? Your senior pass works in a number of locations, not just the National Park Service. They work in any federal recreation area. Note that this usually does not include state recreation areas. State parks and state locations typically have their cards available if this is something you plan to use frequently. What happens if you lose or lose your pass? Unfortunately, if you miss or miss your senior pass, it is not replaceable. You'll need to buy a new pass if you no longer have your annual or lifetime pass. Save your files and get to a safe place with your other travel documents. How long is a senior pass good? If you purchase an annual senior pass, it is valid for a period of 12 months after your pass, if approved. You'll need to renew your annual pass every year if you want to continue using the National Park Pass. The passing of the seniors is good for the rest of your life. The cost will never change, and you won't have to pay any additional fees to keep your pass active. If the price changes in the future, you won't have to pay anything else. How is the money used by these cards? The money from all the senior passes goes to the National Park Foundation Endorsement and the Centennial National Park Challenge Fund. These foundations are the official partner of the National Park Foundation. They serve to promote the mission and purpose of the National Parks. Your money goes toward things like educational programs, park maintenance, and other important maintenance initiatives. A national park pass is not only useful for your own trips and adventures, but also does some good for the world. Explore America the Beautiful While many people have visited a National Park, how often do they take the time to visit these outside their own home state, coast, or side of the world? The National Park Upper Pass makes it affordable for the elderly 62 and older to visit as many parks as they wish. From the Everglades to Yellowstone, there is so much to Who said the second act of your life must be boring? While it's important to start the end of life planning, it's also important to make the most of this opportunity to focus on what you love. Are you ready to explore?
