Ikea black friday adelaide

Flat-pack furniture retailer Ikea says it will offer to buy back thousands of used Ikea furniture parts in 27 countries for resale, recycling or donation to community projects. The Swedish giant said on Tuesday that its Black Friday event will be an opportunity to meet customers' needs in ways that contribute to a circular economy. It will be from November 24 to December 3. A circular economy can only be achieved through investment and collaboration with customers, other companies, local communities and governments, so that we can eradicate waste and create a cycle of repair, reuse, reform and recycling, said Pia Heidenmark Cook, the group's director of sustainability. Ikea plans to have areas in all stores where people can sell their old furniture by next year. The company did not say in what condition the furniture used should be or whether it should be disassembled. The group said it is currently looking at how to better extend the life of products for reuse, refurbishment, remanufacturing and recycling. The mid-year sale of IKEA promises reductions of up to 50% across the store from now until August 10, in-store and online. So take these fratkas people, because there are bargains to be found. The products on sale differ from store to store for as long as inventory lasts, so while we can't give you a list of each item that's currently on sale, you'll see a snapshot of the savings offered online. One of our top mid-year sale choices includes the IKEA MONGSTAD mirror that will surely add a glamorous touch to any room. A sale like this doesn't happen very often at IKEA, but when it does, it's usually to make room for new stock trucks, like all those must-see purchases from the IKEA 2020 catalog. If you've recently moved, are redecorating your home or just feel like it's a piece of flatpack furniture, cancel these weekend plans and go to IKEA. From practical storage solutions to charming lounges, here are just a few of the tempting offerings on offer.
