Geography and climate history and administration Switzerland is located in Western Europe in the centre of Germany, France, Italy and Austria. Made up of 7.5 million Swiss, it is divided into three geographical areas with no access to the sea: the Jura, the Swiss Alps and the Swiss plateau, which includes major cities such as Geneva and Zurich. The climate is oceanic to the west, continental to the east, Mediterranean to the south and extreme in mountainous areas where glaciers gradually disappear. The Swiss people were at the origin of the establishment of Switzerland after forced migration. In 1291, the feudal treaty was the birth of Switzerland in the form of an alliance consisting of several cantons. The Federal State was not created until 1848 and was abolishing borders, as well as establishing a single currency and an army. The first constitution was drafted in the same year and the right to a referendum was added 26 years later.
