This stunning Georgian mansion and its the estate holds many dark secrets, including a harpist murdered in Den Doon at the spot where his ghost was spotted playing musical elements. You may also encounter phantom phantom who, returning from the Crusades, discovered that his wife had been tricked into marrying his friend. There was a struggle with the sword, and the usurper broke through and pounced on the ancient thys tree. Donated to Irvine by Robert the Bruce in 1323. Drum is one of Scotland's oldest tower houses and a point of supernatural measures - from the ghosts of Anna Forbes Irwin (who died in 1900) to the haunting laughter of her son Alexander, who died aged six in 1865. Listen to stories of family heirlooms that inexplicably move at night and ghostly marks in the dark. In 2014, one of Drum's resident ghosts was even captured on camera figured widely in the local and national press. Visit the Green Lady's Room, named after the spirit of a young woman often seen by the fireplace wearing a green dress and squealing an infant in her arms. When the castle was repaired in the 1800s, the bones of the child - assumed murdered - were discovered under the hearth of the fireplace. Archives tell of the unearthly appearance of glowing blocks of ice that moves as someone walks, but not the human form - these visions are always accompanied by a sharp drop in room temperature. The tower house is also home to the White Lady, who is considered Alexander Burnett's young lover, Bert. Poisoned Lady Agnes for being unworthy of her son's hands in marriage, Berta attends on the anniversary of her murder. This fabulous Scottish castle, said to have inspired the Walt Disney brand castle, has been in the Forbes family for more than 350 years. Listen to the tales of Sir John's red, ancient clan feuds and the murder of the most foul. Visit the Blue Room (ghost room) and hear about human shapes that move in the shadows and doors that open and close on their own. There are also stories of ghostly cocktail parties filled with Scottish music and voices from the past; children in the game; and the sleeves were tugging when there was no one there. A Leith Hay family home of almost 400 years old, Leith Hall is haunted by the ghost of John Leith, who was shot dead in 1763 in a drunken brawl in Aberdeen. He was brought home, but died three days later on Christmas Day. Wearing dark green trousers and a shirt, he appears with great pain, compassionate injuries, with a messy white bandage wrapped around his head and covering his eyes. Other attractions include an assimilation of a family dog and children in the game. One of Marr's grandest castles, Castle Fraser is full of quirky features including a secret staircase, trapdoors and a spy hole. Over the years, there have been numerous sightings of a young woman who was murdered in the Green Room. Her bloodied body, dragged down a circular tower, polluted the steps to such an extent that they had to be covered with the wood panelling we see today. Dressed in a long black robe, the ghost of Lady Blanche who died in 1874, wanders through the castle and its gardens. Ghostly whispers, laughter and music were also heard in the Great Hall. This elegant Georgian mansion has been home to the Gordon family for more than 400 years. One of its most famous inhabitants was Lord Archibald Gordon, affectionately known as Archie. Unfortunately, he was killed in 1909, one of the first people in Britain to die in a car crash. Dressed in hunting tweeds with a shock of ginger hair, archie's ghost is often seen smiling and talking to visitors. Haddo also has a more formidable supernatural side, where locked attic doors shook violently at night and staff were threatened and haunted spirits through the corridors of servants and vaulted basements. Tales of murder and betrayal cast a spine-chilling shadow over this 800-year-old Scottish baronial fortress. When the room temperature suddenly drops and the air fills with the aroma of roses, it is said that you are in the presence of the ghost of Lilius Drummond, the Green Lady. Legend has it that Lilia was besetted by husband Alexander Seton's hunger for failing to secure her son and heir. On the night of her second marriage, her ghostly laments were heard outside the marital bed - in the morning, and still visible today, her name was found freshly scratched in the castle walls. Listen to tales of phantom sightings, poltergeists and the curse of deplorable stones, then visit the secret burial chamber of the Grey Lady, whose remains have been discovered, covered in castle walls and whose spirit roams the aisles. This famous 16th-century Scottish tower house, which has lived in the Brodie family for nearly 450 years, has experienced a number of ghostly sightings over the centuries. In the Blue Living Room, a phantom soldier in uniform was seen sitting in contemplation; the ghost of a small dog was spotted heading to the nursery; and sometimes the ghost of Lady Margaret, wife of the 21st Brodie of Brodie, visits Best Bedhamber, where she was killed in a fire in 1786. Visit the tetchy cottage where Hugh Miller wrote about local legends and spine-chilling ghost stories. Start about the severed arm that reached out to him as a child on the night his father died in a shipwreck. Learn about the visions of Hugh's great-grandfather, bookman John Feddes, and then visit the small antique room where many unexplained cases have occurred. On July 27, 1689, the tranquility and tranquility of this beautiful gorge were destroyed when the first shots were fired at Jacobite causes. One soldier escaped by making a spectacular leap across the River Harry at the site now known as The Soldier's Jump. On the anniversary of the battle, the Killycranky Pass is said to ring with the sound of a foot as the government army march to its doom. Other accounts describe being a terrible floating head.
