Free word puzzle games apps

Really dig at puzzle games for Android, but hate is nagged to buy hints and power-ups to make an easy way out? We show off ten of our best puzzle games for Android without in-app purchases. You will find a nice series of sharply abstract friendly and cartoony, physics games and logic games, and almost everything else in between. Of course, the Google Play store is full of options. Feel free to drop a comment and let us know your favorite IAP-less Android puzzle game! Sprinkle Islands is a child-friendly puzzle game about dousing fires. Drag the truck from the section to the destination section, and let the 'er rip. Save the villagers, but also try to conserve as much water as possible (especially if there are bigger fires to deal with further). Various monsters and inanimate obstacles can make your task more difficult over five islands and 60 levels. Its predecessor, Sprinkle, has many more stages along the same vein. Sprinkle Islands has colorful, beautiful graphics and unique fluid physics games. World Goo is a charming and original physics puzzle game where players must build rickertical structures that reach from point A to point B. They do this using different types of sentient goo balls and tools such as balloons to keep the structure upright enough to get all the remaining goo into the intake manifold at the end. Players are scored based on how much goo they carry from start to finish through this structure, although it gets progressively harder as levels begin to move and the goo becomes shorter on offer. World of Goo offers an imaginative, finger-friendly conundrum while poking fun at corporate economics. Splice is an absolutely beautiful puzzle game with an amazing soundtrack. You get to play God by moving branch cells into target formations in as few moves as possible. Each cell can only select two additional cells, although you can move any cell you want to use to another cell. Players can move back and forth in their motion sequences with a simple gesture. Things get complicated when you introduce cells that shoot further after it, split into two parts, or delete all other cells further down the branch. You have to use all of them, and you can't have too many or too few cell leftovers to make a plan. Splice is a meditative and polished experience. The soundtrack itself is likely to keep you playing for a while. Hundreds is a minimalist puzzle game set in sharp colors where players must inflate or deflate circles until the sum of their sizes equals a score of 100. The catch is that if a circle touches something else while resizing it, you need to start from scratch. It sytming in circles that need to be grown simultaneously, buzzsaws that will undo your work, and countless other dangers and mechanics. In total, hundreds elegantly combine sharp design and challenging games. Threes! Is and a cheerful game without ads or in-app purchases. By moving the board of numbered cards in four directions, players aim to get adjacent and equally-numbered cards stacked on top of each other. Each move represents a new tile on the board, which means you need to have stacking to make room for the next batch. When the board fills up, you can't take the next step, you get a score based on the value of the cards on the left, which gets posted on the leaderboards. Threes! is elegant, fun and challenging. You should definitely pick up if you haven't already. Contre Jour is a polished, elegant, innovative side-scrolling conundrum with an absolutely sublime soundtrack. Seriously, listen. The game is a really interesting mix of elements that you could find in the world of Goo, Cut rope, and portal. Players must use different elements to move small cycloptic blob creatures around the map to collect blue balls scattered around the level without falling prey into pits, spikes and other hazards. Artistic style is dark and cute, and leaves a certain impression. Contre Jour offers a good combination of thoughtful and reflex-driven gameplay in a truly unique package. Players in Blek are presented with a number of circles that must be popped up before moving on to the next stage. Black spots are littered in between. Touch them and you need to start over. The way you encounter these goals is by watching a single on-screen gesture, which is then repeated on your own over and over again after lifting your finger. The line can be as simple as a short swipe that goes forward, but more often than not you have to get quite creative to proceed to the next stage. Blek is really innovative and broadens the horizons of touch games. Room two took players on a dark road to figure out how to open a variety of puzzle boxes. In this process, you will learn about otherworldly power, which perhaps should not be in the hands of ordinary men. The process for unlocking these boxes is completely non-linear and will require a lot of left-field thinking. For a relatively static game, the graphics in room two are very well-crafted and set a particularly creepy mood. Hold the first iteration of space for more finely-crafted puzzles. Room 2 provides the same measures of pensive tension and challenge. Lyne is a logical puzzle game where players need to draw lines between two equally colored points. The entire board must be filled, and as you proceed, new types of tiles with a particular behavior can make life more difficult. For example, some tiles require you to go through them twice before you need to complete a level. You can unlock new color palettes to change the look and feel of the game. There are hundreds of stages to work through, so you'll never want for a quick brain-teaser. Lyne is simple, stylish and Difficult. Monument Valley has players guide an unfortunate girl through a twisted maze of Escherian proportions. Optical illusions and impossible architecture are nothing new, but when you turn into a mobile game where you can interact with things that straight-ups can't physically exist, you're left with a whole new feeling. Monument Valley has ten stages with more on the way. Although the list in the Google Play Store shows that Monument Valley offers in-app purchases, we haven't actually found any. Monument Valley is an artfully crafted puzzle game that you won't soon forget. Obviously, there are tons of puzzle games available for Android, and many without IAPs. We want to hear which ones you play these days. Leave a comment below with your favorite puzzle games that buck the freemium trend. [block:block170] Source: Android Central/Jordan Palmer Smartphone touchscreen controls offer puzzle game developers a unique opportunity. Our handheld devices are uniquely suited for smart puzzle games because they are easy to pick up and play whenever you have a few free moments. If you're looking for a brain test game, check some of them out. And when you're done here, be sure to check out our best Android games! Room is a widely celebrated puzzle franchise developed by Fireproof Games for mobile phones. There are four games in a series that each offer hours of challenging puzzle fun. They resemble classic adventure series like Myst and Siberia, into which you can easily dive for many hours, so you have been warned. The last game in the series is Room: Old Sins, which we've teamed up with below, but the whole series is worth checking out if you like a good puzzle. Each of The Room's games is a premium title with no ads or microtransactions and they're just scary enough to keep you on your toes. Immerse yourself in this popular series of puzzle games that hearken back to classics like Myst. Each room game is worth checking out. Mini Metro is an award-winning subway simulator that is steeped with puzzle elements. You have the task of drawing metro lines that connect different stations that pop up when your city expands. You need to make sure passengers arrive where they need to go on time, which often requires re-drawing your lines to be more efficient. With a brilliant minimalist aesthetic, a responsive soundtrack that's materialized by the metro lines you'll build, and tons of different game modes to enjoy, you'll fall in love with the Mini Metro. It's probably the best game to play when you're actually on the subway. Mini Metro is great. It's a simple but addictive game that draws you subway lines. Enjoy minimalism. Bridge Constructor is a great physics-based puzzle game in itself, but this spin-off has a concept and adds in all the crazy elements from the portal and aperture lab. Exist Test chambers to complete using portals, along with drive and repellent gels all while avoiding deadly lasers, pit acids, and sentient towers. It's an excellent cross-over title that provides a challenge that will delight fans of Bridge Constructor and portal alike. It's an absolute pleasure to play with tongs of portal links and even feature Google Play game achievements to help in replayability! Most constructor meets the portal in this excellent cross-over. Avoid environmental hazards and use your technology to complete 60 levels. Source: Google Play Store The New York Times daily crossword puzzles are probably one of the most famous puzzle games of all time, and you can play them all right on your phone — no pencil or pen — with this free app. To access everyday great puzzles, you need to be ordered times, but you get daily Mini Puzzles on the 5x5 board for free. Each puzzle only takes a minute or two to complete, but these are really fun and satisfying ways to start your day. Additional puzzle packs are also available through in-app purchases. You get a free weekly trial of premium stuff, but as I said above, you'll need to be a Times subscriber to get it all. Still, it's great for quick puzzles in the morning when you're drinking coffee, waiting for a bus, or sitting on the subway. Who doesn't like a good crossword puzzle? The New York Times only has an app for you, and although you get the most out of it by being a subscriber, you can still get some smaller puzzles for free. Threes! Is a fun and surprisingly cute puzzle game based on numbers, which aims to swipe the grid and match the numbers. You have to be strategic because if you fill-up the board and run out of moves it's game over! It's a simple game, but one can spend hours trying to master it. For a truly unlimited experience, you'll want to buy a full game without ads or distractions. If you prefer to save your money, there's a free-to-play version, but you'll need to watch ads to earn more games. It's a bit steep price for a game of this type, but when the end product is good, I'm more than happy to support indie developers. Seriously, check out this one if you live time-killing puzzlers. How can a puzzle game about numbers be cute, you ask? Give the threesomes! try to find out. Twenty48 Solitaire is an excellent mash-up between the 2048 puzzle game and the classic Solitaire. It's varied enough to stand out from 2048 tile-replacement gameplay while adding in some of the more satisfying card tricks of Solitaire games. You can set a line with the correct sequence to create a waterfall of deleted cards, which is so satisfying. You have to be strategic about placing cards because it's easy to box yourself in. before you are watching video red. I wouldn't say that monetizing a model in this game is my favorite thing, but gameplay is so addictive that I do my best to overlook it. Twenty48 Solitaire is a really interesting take on two different games, satisfactorily combining 2048 and Solitaire. Monument Valley is an award-winning puzzle game that offers outstanding art and sound design. You play as Ida, a princess who has to find her way through fantastic structures that you have to manipulate and change to complete the journey and help her reach her goal. The controls are simple: click to move the princess while discovering different ways you can move the surrounding structures. It's an intuitive experience that forces you to look at things from a different perspective. The sequel, Monument Valley 2, is much the same, but in a good way. There are a few other twists and turns to the formula, but if you liked the first one, you'll appreciate the sequel. Monument Valley is so good it has copycats. Both games are wonderful puzzle games and worth playing. Dissembler is a colorful and relaxing puzzle game that is seemingly easy to play and features fantastic puzzles. At its core, it's a tile-swapping match-three game, and each level requires you to flip the tiles to match up the colors. However, it's much more than that. Things begin nice and simple, with the game laying down the basic principles as it gradually introduces you to more complex puzzles. Don't worry though, because you'll be ready for them. There are more than 120 puzzles with no time limits, movement restrictions, ads, or in-app purchases to be addressed. Taking match-three to all new heights, Dissembler is a wonderful puzzle game that takes time and thought to master. Like all the best puzzle games, two dots are easy to learn, difficult to master, and highly addictive. This is a sequel to the wildly popular game Dots and the goal remains the same: connect as many dots of the same color as you can. The sequel brings new skills to the table, along with 900+ levels to work through. Once you have completed the first 10 levels that act as a tutorial, Two Dots offers linear adventures of sorts in Treasure Hunt, and unlock a new mode called Expedition once you have reached level 35. There's a lot of different, fun and adorable minimalism to keep you going. The soundtrack is something special, too. Much more than just connecting the dots, the two dots feature spectacular variety and replayability. Source: Google Play Store The best puzzle games are seemingly easy to play while offering a brain-busting challenge. It describes Patterns, a puzzle game that has you rotate pieces to create shapes of different sizes. Each puzzle tells you how many shapes to make and how many pieces can be attached for each one. I swear, sometimes the puzzle looks impossible, and then all of a sudden it just comes if you want to put logical skills to the test, then this is a game you have to look at. There are two modes, timed and freeplay one; the first of these is aimed at people who want stress and challenge. Patterns is free to play, although you can buy a developer a cup of coffee through in-app purchases to remove ads. Probably one of the best brain-teaser/logic puzzle games in the Play Store, Designs is a joy to play. It could be frustrating at times, but keep on doing it and you'll eventually succeed. MC Esher would be damn proud of the hocus, a mind-bending, perspective-based puzzle game that is easy to play, challenging to master, and allows you to create and play other user-created puzzles. Your goal is to get the cube to the red surface marker as fast and efficiently as you can. There are more than 100 official puzzles that require you to swipe to move the cube around the shape. When you hit an intersection between two roads, you can completely change direction on another road. It's wonderful in its minimalism and easy to draw a few hours into. A minimalist prospective conundrum, hocus makes you really think outside the box. Things aren't always what they seem. Brain It On! Is an addictive physics-based puzzle game that requires you to think outside the box to solve each level. Use your finger or stylus to draw lines, shapes, weighted objects, or anything else that you think will solve each screen. Sounds simple, doesn't it? Things become progressively more challenging and creative as you progress through more than 200 levels, with stars awarded for completing levels, finishing by timeout, and minimizing the number of shapes used to solve them. In the free version, future levels can be unlocked to earn stars. You can only pay to remove ads or remove ads and add tips. Yet another addictive game in our list, Brain It On! Is an awesome physics-based puzzler with lots of challenges and replayability. The classic is here, and why wouldn't that be the case? Everyone knows about Tetris and it's a must-play for every player out there. Attack your ears and eyes with Thumper, an awesome rhythm game. It's powerful, it's wonderful, and it's just the right amount of weird and creepy to make things interesting. The soundtrack is a crucial piece of this game, so you'd expect it to be great. Spoiler: It is. The premise is simple: you're a space beetle hurtling forward at blistering speed when you confront a huge head. Sounds pretty silly, but that's not the point of the game. There are nine levels for you to conquer and each one is a treat. Boss battles are something else, but I don't want to ruin it for you. Thumper is a one-time premium purchase without ads or other microtransactions. I have a PC version and I love it, and the mobile version is just as good. This is psychedelic rhythmic hell, and I like it. Thumper is worth the money for addictive gameplay and visuals. House da vinci is a 3D puzzler that requires you to solve various puzzles (duh), escape from certain rooms, explore and find hidden objects, and otherwise have a good time. It asks you to pay attention to your surroundings and make your wits about you. Touch is well optimized, never give me any problems as I navigated the gaming world. Aesthetic and setting are interesting and special, with lots of mechanical puzzles and cool setpieces. Finally, the story is good enough for you to go and wonder what's going on. A unique and fun 3D puzzle game, Dom Da Vinci requires your maximum attention. It's a fun puzzle game/mystery. Transmission is all about establishing links to establish communication lines. Your goal is to solve each puzzle to create a network and makeover, it can get intense. There are 70 levels to beat with 146 stars to collect, so the completionists out there have a lot of work to do. It supports play games achievements, multiple ways to solve each level, and an amazing soundtrack. There are several hours of content here to enjoy and a great way to visualize how networks work. Minimalist artistic style is great to look at. Transmission is just an amazing game, what else can I say? Visualize different networks as you solve puzzles and connect communication nodes. Transfer is great for technology enthusiasts and fans of puzzle games alike. All that remains is less a puzzle game and more adventure that contains tons of puzzles. Either way, it's an excellent escape room-style game. In addition to being just the name of a pretty good metalcore band, it features an interesting premise that is a high bet and keeps you on edge all the time. This can be stressful in points, for sure. You wake up in a strange bunker and you have to escape every room. In each, you will find various logic puzzles and puzzles. It also looks fantastic and sounds great, too. You'll communicate with the player's sister - who claims your character was locked in a bunker for his own good - over a two-way radio. It has a worrying feeling, so if you're worried that you're locked in a bunker, it's not for you. Otherwise, if you like to escape the room games, give everything that remains to try. It's a one-time premium purchase with no ads or IAPs at all. Escape your father's old emergency bunker in this escape room thriller. Solve logic puzzles and puzzles before you find out why you were locked up. Ever play Riven or Myst? Arax's eyes are in much the same vein - an open-ended adventure where you solve puzzles, unlock clues, and uncover bits of story piece by piece. It's a little blunt, but that's what makes it enjoyable and nostalgic. Riven wasn't an easy game for the younger ones to beat me, so I have a soft spot for games like this. The 3D environment is stellar and looks good for mobile games. It's a premium title that doesn't contain any ads or IAPs, so you can just sit back, relax and enjoy the intense fun conundrum. It took me a while to beat him, so you get a lot of money for your money. Fans of games like Myst and Riven will love Arax's eyes. It's a 3D adventure where you solve puzzles, find hidden rooms and safes, and uncover a good story slowly. Hello neighbor is a stealth horror puzzle game. It has been ported over from pc/console release and handles surprisingly well on mobile, although it's a pretty expensive dip in anyway, it's worth it. You play a snoopy neighbor who is spying on a fellow neighborhood resident. He said the man has something behind us and you're determined to find out what he's hiding in his basement. You will break into his house over and over again, but he will learn your patterns every time and set the defense against you. In response, you have to come up with a new strategy by circumventing what is set out. Like I said, this game will run you quite a penny, but I think it's worth it if you want a strategy/puzzle game with horror elements. It's definitely weird, but it's fun if you're into what it offers. It's very highly regarded over on Steam, so you should take that as a good sign for the Android version. It's free to install and try, but then you'll be asked to fork over $15 to unlock the full experience. Find out who your neighbor is up to in this horror strategy conundrum. Break into his house over and over again as he walks past his defenses every time. Puzzle games are among the best games you can play on your phone — although there are many other games we love. Any of the games on this list are well worth the money, but if you want a free puzzle I would highly recommend downloading transmissions, probably the best free puzzler on this list, and the NYTimes Crossword app for a daily dose of 5x5 Mini crossword puzzles while you enjoy a morning cup of coffee. If you didn't spend a little money, you can't go wrong with room series that are some of the most beautifully-designed games in the entire Play Store and feature clock puzzle challenges. I also have to shout Bridge Constructor Portal because it's the perfect crossover between two great games and is probably the closest we'll ever get to a new game portal. For any time you have to pay to play Getting a Play Gift Card is the safest way to load your Google Account with credit used for in-app purchases or premium games without regrouping. Source: Google Play Store Chess Light is a puzzle game that is inspired by chess rather than a real chess game. It might have appeared in our best chess roundup games, but it certainly belongs here! You have more than 180 puzzles and six difficulty levels. There's a hint system for you if you get stuck, but where's the fun in that? Chess Light is free without ads, so get on with it! It can get really challenging, but I recommend you stick to it. Less than a chess puzzle game inspired by chess, Chess Light is a fun and challenging game. Light up all the squares to beat the level! Turn It On is all about solving black box puzzles with gears, levers, gears, switches, dials, and more. Some of these problems are quite intense and will really push you. You must not only find out what each thing does, but also the correct timing to eventually solve the puzzle. The best part about this game is that you have no idea what's going on from the beginning. That's part of his mystification and the entertainment factor. But if things get a little too easy for you, there are other badges to chase that you earn by filling the levels quickly. This game surprised me how fun it is and it's definitely a hidden gem on the Play Store. Turn it on! it's all about solving black box puzzles that use a seemingly impossible amount of elements. Not only do you have to figure out what each piece does, but you also have to nail down the timings. Updated December 2020: Chess light and turn it on! to our list! We can get a commission on purchases using our links, find out more. More.
