On weekends, there is no place where John Budin and Scott Kalish would rather be than their 18th-century farmer's kitchen. Colorful Cuisine March 26, 2007 Keith Scott Morton At the weekend, there's no place where John Budin and Scott Kalish would rather be than their farmhouse near the Delaware River, where colorful woodwork and plenty of sunshine provide a warm welcome. Get more country house style ideas. 1 in 8 Colorful Early American Cuisine The three-story farmhouse offered everything John Budin and Scott Kalish wanted in a weekend retreat -- six acres, original field stone walls and a sunny kitchen. But before the place felt completely at home, the owners had to synchronize two different parts of the house. The original section from the 1740s was solid, but the 1780s encore that included the kitchen had deviated from its early American roots. Pictured: Rich colours and hand-carved textures characterize this early American cuisine. Handmade cabinets hidden dishes and appliances. Soapstone counters, a tin backsplash and an ancient island complete the look. 2 out of 8 Bright Kitchen Island integrity was the key to us, Scott says. We renovated the section from the 1780s without smashing original walls. Interior designer Celeste Callaghan gave the kitchen top priority. First, it replaced the black marble floor with a 200-year-old wide plank floor. Ohio craftsman David T. Smith, known for his museum-grade reproduction-friendly reproductions, created a cooking cabinet, baking station and cabinets to hide modern appliances. Budin and Kalish added an 18th-century exterior and matched the 1950s stools. Now you can practically live here, says John. The kitchen has a relaxed, almost primitive look. That is what we have to say with the 18th century. 3 out of 8 The unusual mustard color is original for the antique bar. 4 of 8 Modern Stove with Tin Backsplash pressed tin was painted with a faux finish for the backsplash. 5 out of 8 soapstone rinses A soapstone sink has an integrated drainage board for convenient cleaning. 6 out of 8 Authentic Details The fresh egg sign listens to the previous life of the house as a chicken farm. 7 of 8 Concealed Television A closet hides a small TV. 8 of 8 window shelves A white wooden drawer, original to the house, now offers a shelf to show framed pieces of bone cutlery excavated during the renovation.
