Dash fruit and veg delivery melbourne

A father son team with a passion for fresh produce seeks to make healthy organic foods easier than ever for households. With some lofty goals and lots of enthusiasm, even after 50 years in business the team from Vari's Organics aims to revolutionize the fresh food business and tackle the big supermarkets with a return to community focused fresh food. Do you find groceries time consuming? Are you frustrated when expensive fruit swapped after one or two days after spending precious weekend hours battling crowds and paying a fortune? Reno Vari, from Vari's Organics, growing up around his father's fruit and veggie shop always understood the value of quality products, but heard his time poor friends become increasingly frustrated with their weekly shopping experience. How it all started Reno says he always had a passion for organic food because he wanted his children to have good healthy food without preservatives that he remembers as a child. But Reno's lightbulb moment came from an unlikely source... local primary school. A local maternal group requested all organic fruits and vegetables for an event, and wanted it packed in boxes. Reno was initially cautious about switching to organic products, as his father's over 48-year history sells conventional products. My father and I have always been proud of the quality of the products and we wanted to ensure that there was variation and quality of products from organic suppliers before we switched the whole store to organic, so we started in small, with boxes only originally sold to the mothers at the local school. Over time words spread and 'organic boxes' became more popular. Looking back was the best, we got to try some great organic suppliers and refine the different box sizes and types for different family sizes and flavors, and then we started selling them online, to make it easier to manage, Reno said. After a while, I started stocking organic products in the store and we began to offer delivery of the organic boxes as well as pickup from the store Reno added. The service became so popular that Reno took the difficult decision to switch the store to an organic only produce, it was a big decision, considering how long we've been in business, but so right, he said. Customers visit www.varisorganics.com.au and order from a selection of fruits and vegetables or just veggie boxes, regular or family sizes (five types of boxes available). The products are hand selected each week according to what is the best quality and in season, boxes are hand assorted by Reno's small team, and then delivered once a week or picked up from the store. (Customers can choose between Friday or Saturday delivery) It's simple, we do the hard work for our customers, starting with the manufacturer, ensuring the best quality and finish of our the house for ultimate convenience, says Reno. How is Vari's Organics doing so far? Vari Organics has capitalized on changing shopper tastes and increased value on convenience that has seen tremendous growth in its organic box delivery service. We have delivered over 26,000 boxes to thousands of customers and we are still growing, we aim to get to over 100,000 boxes by the end of 2016! Vari's Organics, now an institution in Melbourne's west, deliveries all over Melbourne. We started with deliveries in Footscray, West Footscray and Seddon, but now we regularly go all over the west and into the city, eastern and south-eastern suburbs, Reno recalls. Started by Reno's father on Barkly St, West Footscray in late 1965, Vari's Organics, celebrated his 50th year in business last November and is looking forward to a bright future. We're looking at expanding organic boxes delivery, across across victoria, and who knows maybe later across the country. But Reno, still humble and thoughtful, tells how his work while gruelling is really rewarding because he knows it helps so many of his customers so much time, replacing a lot of their time usually devoted to the family weekly shop. It's tiring, but it feels good because I know what it likes with kids and how hectic weekends can be. If we can help by making things a little easier while keeping them healthy, that's pretty cool, he noted. Reno's customers love his service, convenience delivery and super high quality of all the organics in the boxes, you can't just pick up quality products like this, it's really hard to get all these things perfect, I look over every box to make sure that nothing goes into a box that I wouldn't be happy, take a picture and put it on my wall. All the products must be picture perfect and of course taste amazing. Otherwise, do you think our customers come here for my good looks? Reno said while laughing.
