You'll be joking if you play it on your phone. But if not, you are in for treatment while learning to play this game and have fun with your friends when you are at it. How to get Mancala in iMessage Mancala is available directly in the App Store if you want to play without iMessage. But if you try to find it in the iMessage App Store, you should come empty-handed. And yet you can swear that people everywhere play on iMessage. That's because you're looking for the wrong thing. Go to the Messages app and open any iMessage conversation, existing or new. Then tap the App Drawers icon on the left side of the messaging text box. The app drawer appears under an existing toolbar. Click the App Store icon from the app drawer to open the app store for iMessage. Tap the Search icon to search for GamePigeon in the App Store. Click Get to install the app. Then close the App Store and get back to the messages. GamePigeon appears in the app drawer. To browse apps, swipe left or right on the app drawer. Tap the gamepigeon icon to open it. A list of available games opens. Tap Mancal and play Mancala in iMessage with another person in the conversation. How to play Mancala You can play Mancala in iMessage between two players in two modes: Capture and Avalanche. The rules for both modes differ only slightly from each other. Select the mode you want to play in, select the difficulty level and submit the game. Whoever sends the game to the other person must play the second move. When it's your turn, iMessage sends the move to an opponent so they can play their turn. In iMessage you can play with your opponent in one stretch of time. Or you can stretch the game through a time when everyone plays and sends their movement whenever they have time. The basics of the game remain the same, depending on which game mode you choose. The board of the game consists of two lines. Each row has 6 holes, known as pockets. At the end of the board on both sides are individual large holes known as mancalas or shops. Two lines and mancalas are divided between players, as each player owns one line and one mancala. Your pockets are the ones on your side, and your Mancala is the one that's under your pockets on the screen. The view for both players is different, so your pockets are always left and your mancala at the bottom in iMessage. In the game there are 48 stones, which are evenly placed between all pockets. That is, at the beginning of the game, each pocket has 4 stones, and both mancalas are empty. Now the goal of the game is to store the stones from these pockets in mancalas until one line on both sides of the board is empty. Whoever has the most stones in their mancalas at the end of the game wins. Now how you save the stones depends on the mode you play in iMessage. Game Mancala in capture mode The game begins when the first player taps one of the pockets. The stones in this pocket are then dropped one by one into the other pockets counterclockwise. Suppose you tapped the third pocket in a row. Then, one stone each will be dropped in the fourth pocket, the fifth pocket, the sixth pocket, then your mancala, and then the opponent pockets similarly until there are no more stones left. If the stones are still left after dropping one stone each into all opponent's pockets, then the stones are passed to the pockets again. But they skip the opponent's manca. This means that you can never save a stone in your opponent's mancala and increase their number. So you never have to worry about it. Now, if you drop the last stone in your mancala, you will get another free turn, otherwise your opponent will get to play their order. An example of a free turn. Now what differs in capture mode is that if you drop the last stone into an empty pocket on the side, then that stone and all the stones in the adjacent pocket (i.e. your opponent's pocket) are stored in your mancala. This one is known as capture. An example of capture in Mancala. Interception can increase the chances of winning dramatically, especially if there is quite a large number of stones in the opponent's pocket. Your series ends, though, to capture some stones. The game ends only when one of the lines empties, and the player with the most stones in their mancala wins. When the game is over, all the stones still in the pockets of the other person go into their mancalas. So, if they end up with more stones than you, they'll be winners. Plays Mancala in Avalanche mode in iMessage Mancala has most of the same mechanisms as shooting mode, with several key differences. The first is apparently that there is no capture of stones. Now, like capture mode, the player taps one of his pockets to move the stones. The game then drops the stones one by one in adjacent pockets counterclockwise. The key difference in avalanche mode is that the turn ends only when you put the stone in an empty pocket. For example, if you click on the third pocket in a row, it stores the stones in the fourth, fifth, sixth pocket on your side, then in your mancala, and then in the pockets of the opponent and so on. But if you drop the last stone into a pocket that has more stones, then the turn will continue. It does not matter whether the non-empty pocket was yours or your opponent's; the turn continues in both directions. An example of moving in avalanche mode when you drop the last stone into an empty pocket. The longer your move continues in Avalanche mode, the more stones you will fall into the manca. And the chances of you winning are better. The turn will continue until you drop the last stone into the manca or empty pocket. When you move from the side of the opponent to your side, the game skips the opponent's mancal. If you throw the last stone into the manca, you get a free turn. Or else, your opponent gets to play their order. An example of movement that gives a free turn in avalanche mode. The game ends when one of the two lines is empty. And the player with the most stones in their mancala wins. When the game is over, all the stones that are still in the pockets of the other player go directly into their manca. These stones contribute to determining the winner at the end. In iMessage Mancala, you don't have to move the stones yourself. The game moves stones for you. Just tap the pocket from which you want to move the stones to start the movement. Mancala is a game that involves a strategy to win in advance. Playing with friends or family on iMessage won't just be for fun fun; It's going to be a great exercise for your brain, too. Well.
