The image of Goran Bogićević's racing cars from Fotolia.com Automobile Racing comes in different types—but each focuses on specially designed racing cars competing against each other in different scenarios. Car racing has been around since 1895 and has become one of the most popular sports in the world. Manufactured in Maranello, Italy—Ferrari is one of the most popular race cars there is. The Scuderia Ferrari team is a popular participant in the formula 1 world. In 1993, German racing car driver Michael Schumacher drove a Ferrari 412T—meeting Ferrari in Formula One—assess ferrari to one of the most successful brands in racing. From 2008 to 2009, the company also built cars for other automotive racing events, such as the A1 Grand Prix series. They also produced 599 GTB Fiorano and F430 GT powered on gt racing series during other Grand Prix events. Porsche has built many successful racing cars. He produced the legendary Porsche 917 which won two consecutive championships at Le Mans in 1970 and 1971. The Porsche 917 also won the World Racing Championship, winning 8 of 10 championship titles. The Formula One race is considered the highest form of automotive racing sanctioned by the Federation Internationale de l'Automobile. In the 2006 season, formula 1's top car speeds were just over 300 km/h. Within the U.S.—NASCAR races, such as the Sprint Cup Series and Daytona 5000, are the most popular types of races. Racing cars used in NASCAR racing have a peak power of about 830 BHP at 9000 RPM, with peak cover of 520 pounds per foot. They are strictly limited with regard to permissible parts, materials, dimensions, minimum weight components and other parts. NASCAR races are typically 300 to 500 miles in length, and the design line of engines for cars ranges up to 800 miles. The cars used in Formula One races are single-seat runners, which generally contain 2.4L custom V8s. Ignition and fuel systems are controlled by a systematic, computer-friendly digital engine management system. With a minimum weight of 95 kilograms, these cars produce peak power of about 755 BHP at more than 19,000 RPM and a peak shelter of 214 pounds per foot. Every Formula One race car has much fewer limitations compared to NASCAR. Car Bibles support readers. When you shop through links on our website, we can earn an affiliate commission.
