Should I take the megabus or is galgo a better option? 1. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago In Tuesday, my son took megabus from nyc to buffalo and said he was fine. He also occasionally takes Greyhound. I think he's going for the cheapest option. Sometimes you can get a cheap flight between Buffalo and JFK with Jetblue. I think he checks flights, buses and trains, and then decides. He paid about $40 last time. Contributor level 153 publications 2. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago Thank you! yes buses on megabus is about $37 and $46 in greyhound. I think the flights are about $60 in jetblue. 3. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago I'm a Greyhound fan, simply because if there's a problem with a bus, they have a fleet big enough that a replacement doesn't take long - minutes in fact. On my last return trip from New York, the scheduled greyhound bus was delayed in traffic and had not arrived at Port Authority, but was replaced with a Peter Pan bus (subsidiary and equally good quality) that was already at the station in 5 minutes! Contributor level 19,059 publications 2 reviews 7 helpful votes 6. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago The only problem with Whiz's suggestion is that it's not just $60, but the cost of getting from the airport to city compared to already being in town with the bus... You can double the cost if you take a taxi or car service-- I also think it's a long journey on any of the buses, but you're not comparing apples to apples when you mention flying 7. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago My daughter took megabus from albany to nyc and it was an unpleasant experience The bus was full and she and her friend couldn't sit together - there's not much - the wifi no' job - it also doesn't change life, but uncomfortable. When they went back to Albany at 6 a.m. on Sunday, the bus wasn't where they were told it would be. They were scared looking for the bus. Fortunately, they were one of the lucky ones not to have been lost. I've heard other negative reviews from megabus, but maybe we've had your act together for the last two years. I agree with the other sign and for a few extra dollars they go with greyhound. Contributor level 11,144 publications 98 reviews 82 helpful votes 9. Re: Greyhound or Megabus 8 years ago I'm a big fan of saving money, but if the cost of flying is only $60.00, I'd fly. If the cost of airport transfers makes this prospect seem prohibitive, I would encourage you to use buffalo's fast and efficient public bus system to get to the airport (I used the buses in Buffalo and felt they were well run, reliable/reliable). It is possible to take the Q,10 bus from JFK Airport to the subway (free shuttle between bus and metro with a MetroCard) even over time for buffalo's local city bus to the airport and the time it would take for the Q,10 and the subway, it is still faster and more comfortable than it appears to be an 8-hour bus ride.
