Call blocking for landline phones

By Amanda Johnson Verizon Wireless is a leading wireless provider that offers many advanced technological features. Highly rated for customer satisfaction, Verizon provides a reliable network for millions of people in 44 states. From texting and the Internet to GPS navigation and blocking phone numbers, Verizon has many features for customers to use. Verizon allows you to block spam calls or annoying landline calls using the Verizon website. If you block a phone number, calls won't be able to get from that specific phone number. Sign in to your Verizon account using the Verizon site. Type your user name and password in the Connect field located in the upper-right corner of the home page. Find My Services in my Verizon after you sign in. It is located in the horizontal navigation bar. Find Spam Controls in the My Services drop-down menu. You will be redirected to the Spam Controls home page. Select Call & Messaging Blocking on the Spam Controls page. Call blocking & messaging allows you to block your landline number from ringing and leave messages. Type the 10-digit landline number in the field under Phone Call Lock. Click Apply. The landline number will be locked for 90 days. Choose Usage Controls if you want to permanently lock your landline number. On the My Services tab, find Parental Controls. This service sets restrictions on voice minutes and text messages. From the Parental Controls home page, select User Controls. This service is billed monthly for $4.99 at the time of publication. User Controls allows Verizon users to permanently block up to 20 numbers. Find the tab labeled Add Blocked Numbers. Click the Add Blocks button and enter your landline number. Add a name to the 10-digit phone number. Click the Add button. Through Frances Todd Telemarketers or harassment calls are just two reasons why a person might need to block incoming calls. Telemarketers, for example, are prohibited by law to mask their phone numbers to try and get around blocking calls or caller ID. While call blocking is easily accessible on mobile phones, you can also easily block calls on a land line. Contact your service provider. Before you do anything else, you should contact your phone or email service provider to ask about its available options. Many companies have call blocking services available to subscribers. Ask if anything is available in your plan. Press a code. Many companies, including Verizon, use 67 to enable call blocking. Other vendors, would be AT&T, use 60. Enter the number you want to block. Some carriers will also block a certain number for your line, specifically if you contact your service provider yourself. Find out how many You're allowed to block. Some carriers restrict the number of phone numbers you can block on the land line. AT&T, for example, allows a person to block up to six numbers on a land line. By Dampila Contributor phone calls can only be that, a nuisance. Whether it's constant telemarketing companies phoning to try to sell you something, or whether it's international calls doing surveys, you shouldn't have to put up with it. Fortunately, most phone providers offer a service through which you can block unwanted calls. If the calls you receive are threatening, then you can consider taking legal action because harassment is against the law. Contact the police if you're worried. Contact your phone provider and request your subscription when blocking calls. This can be called call screening or call rejection in some states by landline providers. Dial *60 on your phone. Then, you can enter the phone number to be blocked if you know it and press the call button on your phone. This will enable call blocking. Dial *80, enter your phone number, and press the call button to turn off call blocking for a phone number, and it will be removed from the system. Call *60 immediately after receiving a call of inconvenience to add the last number that called you to the lock list. Last night I got one of those calls that everyone is afraid to get in the middle of the night: an emergency happened to a family member :(It seems that my uncle - who has been in and out of the hospital for years with heart problems - was finally on his last legs and was expected to pass at any time overnight. My mom called us kids to pull him a call one last time and say goodbye, so I did it promptly and it was one of the weirdest/hardest calls I've probably had to make. What do you say to someone who's about to cross into the next world? I never had the chance to actually say goodbye before someone was leaving (my grandparents went to sleep), so needless to say it was pretty surreal. All I tried to do was make him laugh one last time and let him know how much we love him and that we'll be seeing him again one day soon (even though he says he'll be down while we're above, haha.. he was pretty trouble maker back on the day :) The next day my parents flew there hoping to catch him one last time before inevitable, and not only did they get to do that and say goodbye to them in person, but they found out something even more amazing: he wasn't dying!!!! Looks like they had a new doctor on call on the spot, accidentally read his wrong signs and thus laying down panic and sadness. So while he's still, really, deteriorating because of his bad heart, unfortunately, they're now saying he'll actually have a whole year or so left until it's time to worry again. Incredible! The reason I'm telling you all this? MAKE SURE YOU LIVE I know we all want to rock it out and be wildly rich beyond our dreams, but at the end of the day money is the last thing we probably care about when it's time to go. Yes, it's important to pay attention too, and yes, you want to have things in place if an emergency hits (just ask my poor friend Ashley, who recently lost her father and had to deal with dirty finances on top of it all), but it's really about feeling like you lived a happy and rewarding life. At least from what I understand... If that changes, and there is blogging in the afterlife, I'll be sure to confirm back :) All I know is that now my uncle appreciates life more than anyone. To be told that you're dying in a few hours, and then getting a 1-year extension is beyond comprehension for me. What would you do with an extra year of your life??? What can you do now while (hopefully) have more than that?? Are you happy? Personally, I'm going to take a day off from obsessed money like me, and reflect on some of those questions instead. I really don't want to wake up one day (my last day) and feel like I haven't lived any! It may be time to update that ol' bucket list while I'm at it too. Until recently, only telemarketers, reporters, and bond traders enjoyed this liberating experience. But more and more business people are putting their phones in favor of headphones — to take notes, check email and generally be more productive while on the phone. FreeHand, a new headset from market leader Plantronics, targets business professionals. The small unit in the ear looks like it should attach to a Walkman rather than a phone. Its noise-cancelling microphone ensures clear sound even in open environments. Its six-legged long cable allows users to scour their offices because they work their Rolodexes. Michael Hedrick, global distribution director for the Bank of Montreal, has been using headphones for years, but he has always found them strange. They're out of here. You just have to take FreeHand up, put it in your ear and answer the phone, he says. It's so convenient. FreeHand retails for about $200. Call Plantronics (800-544-4660) or visit the Web . Speak upWalk in any office and you'll see people crammed around conference calls with distant colleagues. The problem with long-distance teleconferences is that they sound so, well, remote — unless you spend $800 or more for high performance, full-duplex audio equipment. That changes. SoundPoint, a new desktop conferencing system, offers sound at an affordable price. Peter Rusch, a consultant based outside San Francisco, uses SoundPoint to interact with his East Coast clients. In most conference calls, you simply can't get the full impact of the meeting, he complains. But with SoundPoint, I can hear all the conversations. I can even hear secondary conversations when people think they're whispering. SoundPoint comes in two versions: the standard model, which connects to any business phone, and the SoundPoint PC, which works with a sound card, making it great for internet phones and desktop videoconferencing systems. Both versions sell for $299. Call Polycom, Inc. (800-765-9266) or visit the Web . WebPhone's drag-and-drop interface makes it surprisingly easy to use. And the system offers some remarkable features — not least, that is the ability to reach anyone (with an email address) anywhere in the world for the price of a local Internet connection. WebPhone allows users to create messages for specific callers (I'm sorry they had to leave early, Chris; we meet at the office at 10a.m.) or block calls from specific people and direct them directly to the voicemail. Placing a call is as simple as entering an email address or double-clicking an e-book entry. WebPhone 2.0 sells for $49.95. A version with limited features can be downloaded for free.
