Phone? d likee code nedir

It can always be a little disturbing to see a text message you don't remember sending on your smartphone. Lately, some Android users have noticed that Google is sending a text message from their number without warning and wondering exactly what's going on. A trending thread over on Google's support forums highlights a concern quite a few Android users have had over the last few months. Google sends, without notifying users, sending text messages from that user's device back to Google itself. Why is Google doing this? In short, for verification. As the text message itself states, Google sends this message to confirm the number of the device. The company briefly explains this on a support page, but it seems that there is a lot of confusion and concern around this. When you set up a Google Account, you can tell Google about your phone's number. If you do, we'll make sure the number is yours. For your safety, we'll check again from time to time to make sure your phone's number is still yours. When we reconfirm, you can get text messages from Google or see outgoing text messages to Google. The message could say something like, Google is checking the phone number of this device. It's a little disturbing in itself that Google can send a message from your device without consent or notification. It also doesn't help that the numbers sent contain complete random numbers, and that Google often sends these messages in the early hours of the morning, when the user most likely sleeps. A few examples from this support thread are listed below. The primary reason many users have been up in arms about this problem is that the message itself looks a lot like spam. The messages usually read in the style of: (wdVC0p8nw8mO) Google is re-checking the phone # of this device. Read more: The abbreviated link, random code and suspicious timing can definitely make this otherwise innocent message look like spam. But there's not really that much cause for concern as the message is being sent from the phone and not received by phone. Another reason some are annoyed is that these messages can sometimes come with a fee on their carrier bill. So far it seems like this process is most commonly found in India, but some reports on the thread include U.S. users and some countries in Europe as well. This definitely doesn't happen to all users, but it seems to spread around as time goes on. In short, Google isn't spamming your phone, and this isn't an attempt at phishing. Google is trying to verify the phone number on your device. Why is Google trying to do this? Google mentions usage only such as account recovery, 2-step verification, and video calling. We've contacted Google for more information about what's going on. More about Google: FTC: We use revenue auto affiliate links. More. See 9to5Google on YouTube for more news: ClaimYou can only verify a phone number you own. You must be able to receive phone calls and text messages to the phone number you are trying to verify. You must have call blocking settings, apps, or task killers disabled. You must have a working Internet connection over cellular data or Wi-Fi. If you roam or have a bad connection, the verification may not work. Try www.whatsapp.com on your phone's Internet browser to see if you're connected to the Internet. To verify Your phone number: Select your country from the drop-down list. This will automatically fill in your country code on the left. Enter your phone number in the box to the right. Don't put 0 before your phone number. Tap Next to request a code. Enter the 6-digit code you receive via SMS. If you have not received the 6-digit code via SMSWait for the status bar to exit and try again. The waiting time may take up to 10 minutes. Do not guess the code or you will be locked out for a period of time. If the timer runs out before you receive the code, an option appears to request a phone call. Select the Call Me option to request the call. When you answer the call, an automatic voice must tell you the 6-digit code. Insert it to verify WhatsApp.Note: Depending on your operator, you may receive sms and phone call fees. Troubleshoot stepsIf you have trouble verifying, try the following: Restart your phone (If you want to restart your phone, turn off your phone, wait for 30 seconds, and turn it back on). Delete and reinstall the latest version of WhatsApp.Send a test text message from any phone to your own phone number exactly as you entered it into WhatsApp, including the country code, to check your reception. We cannot send your code via any other method for security reasons.
