The space playground solar system scope (or sun only) includes many views and celestial simulations, but above all, you can get closer to the most remote range of the world and experience a lot of amazing spacescapes. I hope it's the most example, easy to understand, and easy to use space model. 3D Encyclopedia Solar's unique encyclopedia will find the most interesting facts about all planets, dwarf planets, all major moons, and more - and everything is accompanied by realistic 3D visualizations. Solar's encyclopedia is available in 10 languages: English, Spanish, German, Russian, Italian, Korean, Chinese and Slovak. More languages are coming soon! You can turn your device to the sky and see all the objects in the right place, but you can also simulate the night sky past or in the future. Here you will find advanced options that can simulate ecliks, equators, adrity lines, or grids (among others). The calculation of the solar system scope of scientific instruments is based on the latest orbital parameters published by NASA, which can simulate celestial position at any time. Everyone is suitable for all audiences and ages: it is enjoyed by space enthusiasts, teachers and scientists, but Solar is also well used by children over 4 years old! These exact maps are based on NASA elevation and image data. The colors and shades of the textures are adjusted according to photos of the true colors made by messengers, Vikings, Cassini and New Horizons spacecraft, and the Hubble Space Telescope. The basic resolution of these maps is free - but if you want the best experience, you can check out the highest quality available with in-app purchases.
