Cyrus took to the stage at the BBC 1's Big Weekend in Middlesbroughon Saturday, where she performed a list of past hits, including a duet of We Can't Stop with Charli XCX, and debuted three new songs from her upcoming project to be released next week: Mother's Daughter, Dream, and Catitude. Turns out Catitude really fulfilled her name when Cyrus showed up to offer her take on one of the most polarizing feuds last year, singing, I love you Nicki, but I listened to Cardi. Internet cues - and memes. In the days since her appearance, fans have taken to playfully dragging Cyrus online, posting lyrical versions such as, I love you @MileyCyrus but i listen to @BTS_twt, or I love you hannah but i listen to mikaila (a profound snippet from Cyrus Hannah Montana's days). Could this possibly reignit tensions between Minaj and Cyrus herself? Minaj's Barbz fanbase has taken over Cyrus' Instagram comments and Twitter mentions, but Minaj herself has yet to comment on the lyrics. (Cardi B has also become a mother in this case.) However, while the skirmish memory of Minaj and Cardi's fame during New York Fashion Week remains fresh, it also brings to mind Cyrus' feud with Minaj back in 2015.After being nominated for Video of the Year nomination for Anaconda for the 2015 MTV Video Music Awards, Minaj aired her complaining via social media - which Cyrus, whose Minaj made her feelings about it very publicly known during the actual VMAs ceremony, wrapped up her acceptance speech for Best Hip-Hop Video by calling Cyrus straight away. It is a curious choice to refer to this feud in his song. There aren't many women in music - so why should they be pitted against each other? And why is Miley involved at all?
