Brick game console price

If you're looking to save some money on video games, you have plenty of options, from local stores to huge online retailers, offering slowly used games for all platforms, as well as providing consoles and handhelds as big discounts. This week we're looking at five of the best places to grab good deals on used gaming gear, based on your nominations. Earlier in the week we asked you to enroll your favorite places to buy used games and consoles. You turned in tons of great tips from local to international. Now we're back to highlight the top five, in no particular order: Looking to get your game on? Well, we've talked about the best resources for PC games, but it..... Read more MoreGoodwillG/O Media can get a Commissionphillips Hue Smart Bulb 3 Pack Whether it's online in ShopGoodwill.com or in brick and mortar stores, it's no surprise that goodwill is a great place for deals on used video games and consoles — both old and new. Odds there's a store near you, and while you're not guaranteed any specific selection — or even a section dedicated to the game— if you find a good one, especially one in a good neighborhood, you'll be surprised at the gems you can find for budget-friendly prices. If online shopping is your thing, ShopGuville is an auction site where you can bid on items you want. Since the site is run by Goodwill, they actually have items they're selling, take pictures of each before going up for sale, and list the background information you can actually trust — as opposed to some stock photos rather than someone else's photos or actual thing. Of course, online prices are just as good. When you do your spring cleaning, you're undoubtedly going to get into the things you want... Read more in the enrollment thread, many of you missed their experiences in goodwill, and pointed out the great bargains you picked up, both through online stores and in brick-and-mortar stores. Of course, Goodwill isn't a sports retailer, so there's not everything out there—or even in order to work, or even checked to make sure they work, so you have to be careful. This deal 360 at your local goodwill, or N64 you see on the website may be at a great cost, but you should be ready for it not to work, or require a little coaxing first. On a personal note, a few years ago I picked up the Fallout trilogy (the first three games, Mind You, Fallout, Fallout 2, and Fallout: Strategy) on DVD for something like a buck, and cry away 2 for something like three dollars — all in my local goodwill. They deserve to be checked out. Read more in your enrollment thread here. eStarfandeStarland is a huge online retailer (though they have a brick-and-mortar presence, but it's actually There's a location just outside D.C.) that sells everything from newly released titles, preorders to future releases, and old-school retro classics — not to mention Run them. Their prices are higher than competitive, especially in the face of huge used sports retailers you may already have in your neighborhood, and they love the community well or comforts to trade to people with old games to offer buyers and great prices for cash or credit. They will also reimburse your shipping for your trade-in. If you're local to your Virginia store, they throw open back rooms every weekend for tournaments, events, and a conference-style person-to-person showroom where you can find all kinds of gems, directly from other collectors and video game fans. Those of you who named Estarland specifically called those latter points in your enrollment thread, and it's worth noting that if you live in the area, you can pick up online orders at the brick-and-mortar store as well. They host special events, and even if you're around the world, you can still participate in the bargains available in your online store or trade in your items. The company has a customer service and sales team that works with customers around the world. The nomination thread also says that if you are a fan of video game collectibles, anime, artbook and other merchandise, Estarland also has a number. Read more in your enrollment thread here. JJGamesJJGames largely specializes in retro gaming and retro consoles, so expect to find tons of used NES and snes consoles, or even a new gamecube to play all the old games you've dusted off the shelf. Just because they deal in classics doesn't mean they don't pay attention to recent games— although you won't see current general hardware like the PS4 or Xbox One for sale—their listing closes with the PS3 and Xbox 360. JJGames offers free shipping on all orders in the United States, and incredible—seriously, incredible discounts on classic titles you wouldn't have thought you could find anywhere else (probably out of someone's basement on eBay). Also, for each of their consoles, they have a library of games available to sell and ship within a business day or so. The company has been a labor of love since 1999, a small business with a handful of dedicated employees, and it has been chugging along, making both classic and modern sports fans happy ever since. In your enrollment thread, you highlighted the fact that JJGame specializes in retro consoles and games- and it only takes a look at the front page to see why. When you can pick up a new snake for about $50, or sell your old consoles and games directly on the site (they don't just take in any business—you can learn more here for resale), it makes sense that they are a diamond in the rough of the game sales used. Nevertheless, we will go out on a limb and note that their new Modestly is priced as well, and you should check it out if you're looking for a decent deal on a replacement console or some old titles. Reading Reading Here in your enrollment thread. AmazonAmazon is like a clear contender here. When looking for specially used games and consoles, their interface may not be the easiest, but they have for sale from individual sellers and Amazon merchants who are happy to offer great discounts on the same product. Best of all, they're usually listed right with new items, so it's not hard to find a version using something if you're looking for something specific. Also, because it's Amazon, you can find just about anything for any platform you're interested in. It doesn't hurt that Amazon is a great place to sell your used goods as well — not so much because they offer the best business in prices or the highest returns if you're an Amazon seller, but because they make the process so painless and easy. In my enrollment thread, I called those points, and many of you filled in the blanks by pointing out that Amazon is a great starting point and a solid baseline for understanding what you can get at what price. Also, if you want to close your old games quickly, they make it easier to maximize your returns, assuming what you have for sale is in demand. Wide selection, easy shopping, and often fast shipping with Prime, and you are a decent contender — or at least someone worth keeping in your back pocket when you go shopping elsewhere. We mentioned before that Amazon is a great place to sell your used and unwanted items and create a Read MoreGlydeGlyde, a popular destination not only for video games, but also phones, tablets and orders. They go to great extent to make the business-process easier, and create an appearance in our guide to hassle-free places to trade in your game. They match individual buyers with specific items they're quickly looking at, even if they broker themselves. They don't sell consoles (at least, not yet), so you won't get access PS2 to go with games that exist for sale, for example, but they have a lot of games listed and a lot of people sell their old games. Still, they have a great selection of both old and new titles, including the current general game, which has been difficult to find normally used at modest prices. They also make it easy to browse and shop- you can easily scroll through the game for any platform and see their starting prices. All games listed on Glide are secondhand, so there's no competition with new titles for pricing. It's a big week in video game release, and you have no better way to scrape cash... Read more in the enrollment thread, many of you said that glide sales and purchase process is remarkably easy and Devoid, and their customer service is known for bending backwards to solve disputes and help people Glide fans say they have a great place to get rid of your stuff quickly if you want to do a few bucks, but it's quite common knowledge that their sales prices aren't always the best, and they take a solid share of their sales in fees, so keep in mind that before you go shopping (or selling!). They may not be the fastest option, but they are the most polished, seamless and easy to use. Read more in your enrollment thread here. Now that you've seen the top five, it's time to put them to an all-out vote to determine community favorites: This week goes out for Honorable Mention 2 and Charles, a brick-and-mortar retailer that offers great prices and has a huge following of fans — just that's not in many places yet. This earned a lot of support in calls for claimant threads, and before you write them as local-only retailers, check their location page- you might be happy to find one you have. They work on old-school purchase/sell/business models, and are more than happy to evaluate your used consoles and games (not to mention books, CDs, DVDs and blue rays, and more) when you bring them in, and if you're on the hunt for something specific, their stores are like hidden finds and magical wonderlands of gems you can't find anywhere else, just sitting on shelves. Don't take my word for it — read what everyone had to say about it here in their nomination thread. Want to make the case for your personal favorites, even if it wasn't included in the list? Remember, the top five contenders earlier in the week are based on their most popular nominations from calls for threads. Don't just complain about the top five, let's know what your preferred option is— and make your case for it — in the discussions below. Hive is based on five reader nominations. As with most hive five positions, if your favorite was left out, it didn't get the necessary nominations in the call for the contender post to make the top five. We understand that it's a bit of a popularity contest. Is there a suggestion for Hive Five? Send us an email on Tips + hivefive@lifehacker.com!
