(Bloomberg) - Investors want to see more parts of the geopolitical fall of the Middle East puzzle into place before they give bonds in the region a fresh lift. The annual meeting of the Gulf Cooperation Council in Saudi Arabia on Tuesday raises hopes for a th away between Qatar on the one hand, and Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain and Egypt on the other. Saudi Arabia said it would open its land, air and sea borders with Qatar on Monday evening ahead of the meeting, dramatically easing a years-long diplomatic rift. However, the market impact of a full recovery of ties can be muted, as investors focus on bigger concerns, including U.S. President-elect Joe Biden's stance on key allies in the region, and escalating tensions between Washington and Tehran.Any move to remedy the standoff would only be marginally positive for the region's debt markets, said Mohiddin Kromfall, Dubai's chief investment officer for the Middle East and North Africa. While it is clearly welcome news to see a convergence of some kind between GCADCP members, this is perhaps one of the less influential geopolitical pressure points facing the region, he said in an interview with Bloomberg Television. It will take time to convince the market that trust has been restored. Here's how investors are considering a potential easing in the Qatar rift: Mohammad Awan, managing director of rates and fixed income at Mashreq Bank in Dubai This is a positive step and predicted for more than a month. This will benefit with GCC trading and travel, secondary bond prices have already adjusted to a potential resolution, and therefore I don't see any major step in this developmentThis is positive for the new issue market, as regional investors will again get involved in the sale of bondsAbdul Kadir Hussain, Dubai's head of fixed income asset management at Arqaam Capital'll the Qatar problem gets a solution, it will simply increase. I do not expect muchAny agreement to improve relations can fuel a small bounce in GCC bondsif you do not get a rapprochement, and you get increased rhetoric against Iran, then you can get a small drop in the price. My positioning doesn't give the summit much importance - it's dictated more by the vaccine and global GDP factors by Sergy Derogachev, Union Investment Privatfonds GmbH cash manager in Frankfurt: Positive news from the summit will certainly support risky sentiment for the RSC issuer and possibly lead to a slight tightening of the spread, but I don't expect huge spikes in bond pricesSaudi Arabia , Qatar, Abu Dhabi will probably also seek to sell more debt in the first quarter of the yearJoys Matthew , Head of Equity Research at United Securities in Muscat: Markets should take this positively, if the Gulf states ease their dispute We are looking at Saudi consumer companies getting the lost market reopened, Qatari logistics and transport companies saving on travel time and fuel costs , and UAE real estate companies are likely to benefit from new investmentsCompanies include Saudi Arabia's Almarai Co., Qatar's Al Meera Consumer Goods Co. QSC and Milaha Looks like that there is some pre-positioning on these lines in the market since rumors became stronger last month. No deal could disappoint these investorsAmjad Ahmad, director of the Washington initiative of the Atlantic Council EmpowerMEA selection of conflicts is a crucial building block to attract investment to attract much-needed economic diversification across the Persian Gulf, especially for Saudi Arabian light of economic decline and the mounting debt of the ACA countries, this deal could not have come at a better time (Mashreq Bank and Atlantic Council comments) For more , please visit us at bloomberg.comSubscribe now to stay ahead with the most reliable source of business news.©2021 Bloomberg L.P.Hong Kong's outgoing top judge issued a request on Tuesday to preserve judicial independence as Chinese state media and a growing number of pro-Beijing figures call for an overhaul of how financial hub courts operate.
