Your preschooler's brain may understand that it's raining and can't go outside and play, but their body still wants to go a mile a minute. Small children by nature are active creatures and although it is nice to have a relaxing day at home where you are not in progress, you need to give the child a chance to blow off some steam. Here are some fun games that will keep you both from going crazy. 1 vgnajc/Vetta/Getty Images It's time to celebrate! And it doesn't matter what. Pull out your dress gear, whether it's old Halloween costumes, oversized clothes from mom and dad's closet, or even silly hats and scarves, and march around the house, banging pots and pans, waving flags and dragging dolls and toys in the wagon. Everything can serve as an accessory – wooden spoons, feathered dust, even cans filled with coins or beans. Include everyone – younger and older siblings and even pets for a day of fun. 2 Steve Prezant/Image Source/Getty Images I'm not normally an advocate of playing ball in the house, but this version of indoor baseball is sure to be a hit. Your gear should include crumpled pieces of newspaper (ball) (cover with aluminium foil if it will not together), an empty paper roll of towels (bat) and some cushions that serve as bases. Move coffee coffee in the living room so you have enough space and play ball! 3 Kisesu Irie/EyeEm/Getty Images This one will use your child's large collection of stuffed animals. Collect as many animals as you can and put them in a large bag or bag. While covering your eyes, let your preschooler pull the animal out and then bring it back. See if you can guess which animal they chose while acting as if it were. They're taking turns. If you do not have a lot of stuffed animals, just let them choose in your head, or draw or cut pictures of animals on cards and alternately choose from the deck. 4 Tatjana Tomsickova Photography/Moment/Getty Images This requires some forward planning. Cut the shapes of the fish from cardboard or solid paper and attach the paper clip to each of them. Write a different activity on each fish, for example: 5 Jumping Jacks Jog in Place Touch Your Toes or Skip in a Circle. Put the fish in a large bowl or in an angular space on the floor. This is your pond. Take a long pole (yardstick will do) and tie a string with a magnet attached to the end. Let your child go fishing. Have them complete each activity as they immerse their catch. 5 Sindy Steinbrck/EyeEm/Getty Images Beanbags are great for many activities. Light and unlikely to hurt anyone, they are perfect for small hands that learn to throw and catch. Fun games include: Beanbag Toss: Set a series of goals where you can throw a beanbag - you can use a laundry basket, pots, bowls even shoes. Stagger goals at different distances and see who can hit their mark the most. Beanbag Balance: Who can walk the most excurtity with a beanbag or two on their head? On your elbow? On your knee? Can you run with a beanbag on all these parts of your body? Can you jump? Tossing beanbag: See how many times your preschooler can clap his hands between throwing and catching a beanbag. Can I do it with my eyes closed? 6 FlamingPumpkin/E+/Getty Images Again, you will need to plan a little ahead for this activity. Gather a bunch of small trinkets, new or old, such as toy cars, books, snacks and stickers and hide them in different places throughout the house. Put together a map so your preschooler knows where to look. Turn on fun instructions such as Take steps back through the kitchen or Look where you keep the things you put on your feet (read them or draw pictures if they can't read yet). Have the final instruction lead them to a reward – perhaps a special snack or sofa where you can cuddle and read a book together. Thank you for your feedback! What are your concerns? Concern?
