It can be a frightening and haunting occasion full of creepy costumes and shocking horrors. However, it can also be a holiday full of joy and joy, where young and old people can dress up as their favorite characters and go and take care of delicious snacks and food. The popular but controversial holiday is celebrated around the world. It has become such a massive event that Hollywood has had more than its share of movies depicting Halloween. While films like Harry Potter and Azkaban's Prisoner and John Carpenter's 1978 Halloween are the most beloved Halloween movies, many more don't even start doing holiday justice. Here are the worst Halloween-themed movies of all time. 15. Trick or treat | De Laurentiis Entertainment Group Rotten Tomatoes score: 71% In 1986, someone thought it wise to push Gene Simmons and Ozzy Osbourne into a Halloween movie that led to the metal horror comedy Trick or Treat. Family I knew Marc Price was playing a teenager obsessed with heavy metal. One day, the teen decides to play her Sammi Curr record in the opposite direction, which is clearly a terrible idea, and she inadvertently unleashes a deadly curse. Soon the teenager realizes there's more to life than rock and roll. Unfortunately, Trick or Treat is far too complicated for a simple life lesson. Next up is a movie featuring a bad witch and gingerbread. 14. Redhead Redhead | Full Moon Entertainment Rotten Tomatoes score: 60% We need to give Gingerdead Man some credit for its delightful plot. The film follows a mad witch who revives her son from the dead. Unfortunately, his son happens to be a bad killer. He brings her back as a giant psychopathic gingerbread man, the only one of whom, is in the process of killing a girl, killing. Executed him. In addition to the terrible one-liner, we also can't get over the witch literally mixing her son's ashes into gingerbread dough. It's really absurd. Next up: A meaf family Halloween movie. 13. Scary Guys Scary Guys | Disney Rotten Tomatoes score: 51% in the 90s and early 2000s we had family Halloween movies like Don't Look Under the Bed and Hocus Pocus. Generation Z won't get that either. The scary pals of 2011 apparently wanted parents to pull their hair out. The family movie follows a group of dogs called The Buddies. Pip, Zelda, Rodney and Skip must stop Warwick the Wizard (Harland Williams) and save the world from their terrible antics. We love dogs as much as the next person and the dogs in this movie are quite delightful, but unless you're literally under two years old, Spooky Buddies is just unbearable. For children growing up amid ever-expanding technology, they cannot be expected to deal with talking dogs whose lips do not even move. Next up is a movie about a dog and a creepy neighbor on the 12th. The dog that saved Halloween | Anchor Bay Entertainment Rotten Tomatoes score: 37% Thought we left AirBid back in the '90s, but apparently we were wrong. We're not sure why Hollywood despises children so much, but if The Dog Who Saved Halloween is a sign, they really don't hold kids in a big relationship. The film follows a talking dog (Joey Lawrence) who encounters a haunted house, a creepy neighbor (Lance Henriksen) and an evil dog (Mayim Bialik). The narrative is both dry and limited sexist, and you'd better pop in at the old Casper VHS for your Halloween needs. Next up: Possibly the worst clown movie ever. 11. Clown murders clown murders | Trans Media Entertainment Rotten Tomatoes score: 37% Clown murders started on the wrong foot by coming out the same year as John Carpenter's Halloween. The narrative just reeks of misogyny. The film follows a group of friends who kidnap one of their ex-girlfriends who have married a wealthy man. As you'd expect, things get out of hand quickly. Even John Candy couldn't save this mess. Next: A movie that really is crazy 10. Mr Wacko Wacko | Jensen Farley Pictures Rotten Tomatoes score: not available We all know that cheat movies are either ingenious or irritable. Unfortunately, there seems to be nothing in between. Before Scary Movie Franchise, director Greydon Clark decided to give us a Halloween parody movie called Wacko. The film follows high school students and police (Joe Don Baker) waiting for Halloween and the so-called lawnmower killer. The film may seem straightforward enough, except for the irrational notion of lawn mowing, but any better can't make it. Mary, the protagonist of the movie still haunts me for 13 years. Years. His sister's death. He constantly seems small lawn moths everywhere, which is honestly more hilarious than sad. They could have picked a better weapon. Next: it's definitely not your mother's Halloween 9. Halloween Night | Asylum Rotten Tomatoes score: 17% Halloween night's premise is straightforward enough. It involves a crazy man fleeing a mental institution and heading to his old family home. On arrival, he notices that the Halloween party is in full swing. Unfortunately, the movie gets worse for it. Although it debuted in 2006, special effects and movies are so poorly made that it looks like something out of the '70s. It's also pretty sad that the plot is a hoax from the entire Halloween franchise. This time, instead of the scary Mike Myers or even Ghostface, we're under a killer whose face looks more irrational than scary. It looks like a legal meltdown. Next up: A terrible parody horror movie. 8. Stan Helsing Stan Helsing | Anchor Bay Productions Rotten Tomatoes score: 17% of Hollywood loves to cash in on a good thing, which is why Stan Helsing happened. The film debuted in 2009 and focuses on a video store employee named Stan Helsing, his ex-girlfriend, best friend and exotic dancer. The group ends up in a city cursed by the biggest monsters in movie history, such as Freddy, Jason, Pinhead, Leatherface, Chucky and Michael Myers. Mostly, the film was just a waste with horrible jokes and plot points that fell flat. Next up: The movie that tried to bring all your favorite monsters together on The 7th. Pumpkin Carver Pumpkin Carver | First Look International Rotten Tomatoes score: 16% Pumpkin Carver proves that practical jokes are always a bad idea. The film follows Alec (David J. Wright), who decides to dress up as a masked killer and intimidate his girlfriend Lynn (Amy Weber). Unfortunately, Lynn's brother takes the joke seriously and stabs Alec to death. A year later, the siblings are fleeing a familiar mass murderer. It's the same old story we've seen a hundred times before. Pumpkin heads aren't scary either. Next up: Nicolas Cage in horror film 6. Willow Man Willow Man | Warner Bros. Rotten Tomatoes score: 15% in The Willow Man's Game, Nicolas Cage plays a detective who travels to a remote island in search of a missing girl. When he arrives, he discovers that the islanders have truly dark rituals and beliefs. Willow Man is a remake of a Halloween movie that should never have happened, where Cage dressed up as a bear and hit a nun. The best thing a movie can offer is costume inspiration. Next up: Another day, another pumpkin head. 5. Jack-O Jack-O | America Independent Productions Rotten Tomatoes score: 14% In 1995 Steve Latshaw gave us Jack-O and The Halloween movie genre has never recovered. The premise of the film is not bad, is not bad, which does not love jack-o-lanterns. Unfortunately, it's only going to get worse. The plot follows an ascending wizard with a pumpkin head (yes, we are just as confused as you) who has woken up and seeks revenge for his death by hunting his killer's ancestors. In addition to the confusing plot, director Latshaw decided to put his son Ryan Latshaw in the lead role. Unfortunately, the teenager was unable to work his way out of the paper bag. Jack-O is one of the most famous horror films of all time. Up next: Halloween franchise worst 4. Halloween: Resurrection Halloween Resurrection | Dimension Films Rotten Tomatoes score: 12% We love almost everything about Halloween franchise, but the 2002 Halloween resurrection is simply lousy. The film is so dated that not even two decades later, it's ridiculous to watch. In the film, Laure Strobe (Jamie Lee Curtis) pushes into the middle of a reality show. Someone thought it was a good idea to place the cameras around Mike Myers' old house. A serial killer comes out of retirement to kill them all. Rapper Busta Rhymes kung-fu kicks Mike out the window. It sucked. Up next: A movie full of Martians and Robots 3. Spaced Invaders Spaced Invaders | Touchstone Rotten Tomatoes score: 8% spaced invaders of the 1990s should have been interesting, but it didn't even bother to live up to its plot. The story follows green Martians descending on Illinois on Halloween because they believe they should invade the country. That's where the interesting parts of the narrative end. Instead, they befriend two people and use their space technology to fight a killer robot. There are 100 better invasion movies than this. Next: Troll movie without troll 2. Troll 2 Troll 2 | Filmirage Rotten Tomatoes score: 6% Troll 2 is a movie without a single troll, so it tells you how good it is. The film follows Joshua (Michael Stephenson), who doesn't want to go on holiday with his family to the city of Nilbog for fear of trolls running around town. His parents won't care about him until they face the evil creatures themselves. Did we mention there's a go-to, but no trolls? Nilbog is also written backwards by Goblin. Next, shame on Jim Carrey. 1. Boy of the Mask | New Line Cinema Rotten Tomatoes score: 6% May not have a Halloween-themed movie or sequel other than cringe-worthy Son of the Mask. It's a disgrace to Jim Carrey's incredible work and good name. The film follows Tim Avery (Jamie Kennedy), a cartoonist who lives a peaceful life with his family in the suburbs. Things change when the family dog Mysterious mask. The film is a disaster. Kennedy just doesn't have Carrey's comedy, and his antics in the mask are just disturbing and annoying. If you still find in your heart to appreciate Halloween after this Halloween-themed movie, you're a better person than we are. Follow Aramide Tinubu on Twitter @midnightrami. Twitter @midnightrami.
