Stable coins can be fixed in various types of assets such as USD coins (USDC), paxos (PAX), and trueUSD (TUSD), tokens backed by a 1:1 ratio with the money held in a bank account. To issue these cryptocurrencies, companies must place the same amount of FIAT currency, such as USD, in their bank accounts. In this case, by pegging the actual word assets to the US dollar, these coins can avoid price volatility in the cryptocurrency trading market. Some stable coins are fixed in other cryptocurrencies called cryptocurrency-backed stable coins. The pegs of these coins are maintained through over-collateralization and stability mechanisms. A prime example is DAI, a stable coin mined in the maker DAO ecosystem. We focus on cryptocurrency transfer, while our competitors prioritize Fiat on password conversion. We offer a universal payment solution for everyone - from password beginners to crypto pros. We are not aiming to be the only stablecoin, but we are aiming to be the most used solution in the crypto-closing market. USDx vs other stablecoin stablecoins are backed by the cryptocurrency Stablecoin, backed by Fiat Stablecoin, backed by ancillary blockchains based on the source code Bitshares Bitcoin blockchain with omni-layer protocols.
