The image via Devolver Digital Mediatonic's Fall Guys has been a popular hit in the battle royale genre since its official release earlier this month. Hex-A-Gone is one of the last game modes in which players can participate. The goal of this round is to be the last person standing. But with each tile falling apart after it has stood on, players need to think fast on the fly to dodge each opponent. Excluding the initial distributed launch platform players stand on, there are eight different tiered platforms one above the other before players fall to their fall. Regardless of the strategy you choose to use in this mode, there are many ways to optimize your game and keep the amount of tiles under your feet. Instead of running around each plate, if you jump before the floor disappears under you, you can reduce the total time it takes for the area around you to disappear completely. Also, if you have tiles adjacent to you but are separated by only one tile length, you can always jump between tiles. If there is another island of land that is two tiles away from you, you can cross the distance with a well-timed diving jump. Since everyone starts on an equal footing, there are many strategies you can go through after the start of a match. If you want to try to cheese your opponents, you can fall directly to the bottom intentionally, either by falling through the center or jumping from the side and diving back inward. Then you can start removing the tiles intentionally as soon as possible, starting from the inside. Since some players may stumble and fall on multiple floors before landing safely, it can catch unsuspecting players off the trail and cause you to get some shoddy picks. But this strategy doesn't work well against experienced players or competitors who correctly move the camera down before they fall to another platform. While this can be a fun tunnel vision on a single strategy, the best way to get closer to such a mode is to constantly adjust the gameplay depending on the state of the round. Fighting the state of the map as a flowchart will bring benefits, and the more ruthless you are against your opponent, the better. If you're on the same level as other opponents, playing aggressively and moving fast to cut off the amount of space they have, it can force them to make a mistake. When you try to remove as many tiles as possible, you can stand on two tiles at once, halving the time it takes to ruin another player's run. When you find yourself as the highest player on the map, playing slower and jumping at each step between tiles will stop the amount of time before you have to jump off another level. When you are the lowest player on the map in this mode, you can rotate to play slowly and hoping that the players above will fall to the level or you can play fast and cut places under the players above you, so that they fall prematurely on the slime. Ultimately, while applying these strategies to your gameplay will get you away, practice is what makes it perfect in Fall Guys. Hex-A-Gone is one of the toughest finals to win in the Fall Guys. The number of levels and a huge number of possible routes runs this level to more skillful players. Under no circumstances can you guarantee a win, but the following tips can greatly increase your chances. Hex-A-Gone is probably one of the funniest finals in the Fall Guys. You are completely in control, just hexagons and other players worry. The aim of the game is to be the last player standing over the slime. Falling through the last level of hexagons into the slime will eliminate you. Hex-A-Gone Strategy There are several different strategies to win Hex-A-Gone. Both main strategies can destroy the field and secure the next crown. Strategy 1 This first strategy is probably the riskiest. It involves deliberately falling through the levels to reach a very lower blue level. In this example, the player eats tiles from the inside, gradually circling toward the edge. This is in the hope that by the time the rest of the players fall to the final level, there will be little to land on and they will eventually be eliminated in the slime. As you win Hexagon 99% of the time with FallGuysGame Hex-A-Gone Strategy 1 Video Walkthrough This player was quite happy other players didn't play particularly well and usually you can angle the camera down to make sure you land on the full tile area. Players who managed to land at the lowest level ate them too quickly and made some simple unforced errors. However, if a high risk strategy is for you then it is more than able to repay to win the crown. Strategy 2 This strategy is quite the opposite of number 1. It consists in the fact that the player remains as high as possible at all times and is very methodical in the level drop. This strategy includes a mix of offensive running and defensive hopping. Offensive running quickly eats tiles, but can cut off other players to isolate the level for themselves. This can lead to the use of a defensive hopping strategy where you just go as slow as you can. It will survive your opponents and keep as many unused hexagons and ready to jump on. Hex-A-Gone Strategy 2 Video Walkthrough As you can see, the player combines both offensive runs and defensive hopping to win with ease. This is probably the most famous strategy, leaving the score down to the ratings and performance of other players. There are times when you have to admit that the level you are at is no longer the future. At this point, use the camera angle to look down and evaluate the jump to the correct path. Hex-A-Gone Tips We've already gone through 2 specific strategies, Some important tips to take advantage of each Hex-A-Gone final you find yourself in. First of all, do not concentrate on the top floor itself. On the top floors there are fewer tiles and you can just prepare for a bigger fall. Concentrating on floors two or three below the top is the best place to start to be really competitive. As a rule, it is best to clean the middle, leaving 2 or 3 escape routes outside. This will increase the chances of players falling through and give you plenty of tiles to survive. Best practices Stay as high as you can. Maneuver the camera angle to plan a fall on a solid route. Use offensive running to cut off players and build an isolated route. When you cut players off, do it in a way that gives you a clean path. Defensive jumping can significantly reduce the amount of hexagons used, which gives you more time. Jumping and diving can get you over 2 missing hexagons. Be sure to jump in immediately as you land otherwise you will fall to the next level. Don't give up, even if you only have a few tiles left. Players can make a mistake or crash at any time. Advanced players can use the high-risk method to speed up the elimination of other players. Grabbing players in the right way will make them freeze and lose. Grab should be for a minimum time and you should be ready to jump or dive right after to make sure you don't get lost with them. This can be very effective, but use it only if you think the risk is worth the reward. If completing a successful grip gives you the whole floor for yourself, defensive hopping all over the floor can just seal the win. Other Finals Guides The ultimate goal in most Fall Guys game modes is not necessarily to win, but to survive each round; just don't be a loser and you'll be successful. But in the fall guy match there can only be one winner, this will decide in the final round. There are several different types of ultimate game modes already, with more possible coming in the future one day, but one that players can experience the most is Hex-A-Gone. Since Hex-A-Gone can only be played in the finals, only the best players who survive each round will be able to play it. The goal of this game mode is to survive the longest, and in this case it means that it does not fall off the map. There are several layers of hexagonal platforms on which players can land, but every time one of the Hexagon is stepped on, it disappears. Players who are able to survive the floor under them disappear constantly will be the winner. But when there are 10 other players who want to win themselves by running all the hexagons, it can be a real challenge. This guide will look at tips for success in Fall Guys mode So players can take home the crown. Fall Guy's Hex-A-Gone Survival Guide Before the start of the match all players get stuck on one At the start of the match, these tiles disappear. While each player has their own tile, there are several others at the same height. To maintain a higher position, many players can jump to land on unclaimed tiles. However, it can be bait. When several players jump towards the same tile, they all end up in the same place on the ground floor. This causes the area below the missed tiles to become more crowded, as a result of which more tiles in this area will disappear. While it may be beneficial to stay higher a little longer, consider jumping down immediately to avoid this crowd of other players. This way you can get their bases faster and have an easier time knowing what hexagons to avoid. After falling from the beginning, players need to multitask several targets at once. The first is the simplest: it does not fall to a lower level. After all, falling to the bottom causes a loss. But it's difficult for many reasons, and why juggling a few tasks is needed to win Hex-A-Gone. Tiles can only be stepped on once, so players can never play their steps. They must constantly run and jump to avoid any interruptions so that they can remain their current façade for as long as possible. Running around the outer part of this hexagonal level in a circle and slow loosening inwards will help players save platforms for as long as possible. In an ideal world they will be able to do this, but with other players creating their own gaps in the floor, the strategy needs to change to adapt to these problems. If an outsider needs to move more inward, a gap in the road will prevent them from doing so. When it happens to see another player running outside, create a path in such a way that it cuts them off from reaching safer ground. Then they will be forced to go to a lower level. To avoid this scenario, as someone works along the end, always be on the lookout for other players, and cut to avoid them from cutting holes. Be very aware of what tiles have been taken, and think about a safe route as possible. Do not forget that even if the hexagons are not connected directly to each other, players can still jump or dive into them. Be careful though when diving, as players may not have enough time to return before the hexagon under them disappears. Ultimately, no matter how conservative the players are with the hexagons, they will eventually have to move on to the next level. When they do, players shouldn't blindly just crash. They need to actively consider to what part of the next level they should go down. If they do not, they can fall into an area that has already disappeared, and completely pass through this level. To avoid this, players must track which lower levels are still intact and plan a route to that level. Of course, no developed; so that you can cover the greater fall distance and reach the areas further away. If players mess up while moving to the next level below, they can stumble and fall all the way to the bottom: elimination.
