When the big turkey dinner is over, pop some popcorn, line up to feel good in a family flick, and settle down for a good old-fashioned movie at night. We've rounded up some of our favorite movies to drive to watch while you digest your turkey feast, including holiday classics like Charlie Brown for Thanksgiving (which you can stream for free!) and movies with themes of gratitude like Blind Side. And if you're missing a big gathering this year, you might even be planning a virtual movie night with family or friends. Steve Martin, John Candy, and Kevin Bacon star in this comedy about a one-man struggle to make it home during Thanksgiving dinner. In a year when holiday travel will be limited, this feel good flick will remind you how grateful you are at home. Stream It: Airplanes, Trains, and Automobiles ($4 to rent, Amazon) It's not truly Thanksgiving until we've watched Charlie Brown and the rest of the peanut gang prepare their feast. This family-friendly flick is a holiday must-watch. Stream it for free on Apple TV+ on November 25-27. You've Got Mail is not only a classic '90s rom-com, it's also a must-watch holiday flick. Watch Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan fall in love at the classic Thanksgiving grocery store scene. Stream It: You've Got Mail ($4 to rent, Amazon) After losing her job and learning that her teenage daughter would rather spend Thanksgiving with her boyfriend than with her, Claudia Larson takes a trip home to spend a chaotic Thanksgiving with her family. Stream It: Home for the Holidays ($4 leased by Amazon) Watch Richard Gere and Winona Ryder develop an unexpected love story in this sweet, romantic flick. As the name suggests, this film has all the classic scenes of autumn in New York- the perfect Thanksgiving Day movie for the marathon. Stream It: Autumn in New York ($2 to rent, Amazon) Thanksgiving is for thanksgiving, so Blind Side is a great choice for your post-Turkey dinner movie at night. This heartwarming movie includes some funny Thanksgiving scenes and a whole lot of football. Stream It: Blind Side ($4 leased by Amazon) © Copyright. All rights reserved. Summer is officially here, and that means it's time to break out the barbecue and light up the fire pit. If you really aim to impress your friends and family and take your cookout to the next level, however, you can always set up a home theater right in your backyard. As projectors become cheaper and movies become more accessible than ever before, this is the perfect time is a backyard movie at night. If this sounds like the perfect way to spend your weekend, here's everything you need to turn your backyard into the ultimate outdoor location. Further reading Projector Needless to say, if you want to watch movies, you will need something to actually create a picture. And while outdoor TVs are of course getting better – Samsung just entered the fray, after all – we still recommend sticking with a tried and genuine projector. This means that this pattern is best for you to depend on your situation and how vivid you want the image. If you're close to your house and don't mind running some extension cables, you might be able to choose a traditional home theater projector like the Optoma UHD50. Optoma's offer boasts incredible color accuracy, easy setup, and budget friendly pricing. If you do not want to deal with cables, getting a solid portable projector with good battery life is important. It's easy to go cheaply on a portable projector, but if you want a stable image quality, you'll want to find something better. We recommend LG PF50KA thanks to its built-in Smart TV software, robust connectivity capabilities and HD resolution. For a smaller option, you can look for one of the best pocket projectors. For something that is compact and functional, we recommend Anker Nebula Capsule II. It has built-in Android TV, solid image quality, and built-in speakers that blow competition out of the water. Projector screen When you have a projector, you will need a surface to throw a picture. Your first instincts may be projecting an image on your home side, and although it might work, it will most likely distort the image if the surface is not flat. The best solution is to buy a projector screen that is usually portable and requires some steps to create. For maximum outdoor viewing, gemmy 39121-32 Airblown Movie Screen is an ideal choice. It offers a cinema-like experience outdoors, and it collapses for easy storage. It is also durable and weather-resistant. Able speakers Although projectors often include speakers, they are usually quite underwhelming and not enough for backyard films at night. If you want the best sound sound, you'll want to pick up some extra speakers. Fortunately, there are some viable options to consider. If you're looking for something simple and relatively budget friendly, the soundbar isn't a bad way to go because they can significantly improve sound quality without taking a ton of space. We recommend the Yamaha YAS-209, which offers strong sound, multiple sound modes, and Alexa built-in. If you don't want to deal with cables, portable Bluetooth speakers are a great alternative. Their sound quality has improved significantly over the years and now they sound just as good to the average listener as traditional. Settings. Which of you will need it will ultimately depend on how many people are listening, however, and how loud the speaker should be. As far as Bluetooth speakers go, we recommend Ultimate Ears Megaboom 3. Thanks to its 360 degree sound, powerful bass and its ability to pair with additional Megaboom devices, 3 delivers quality sound that is more than enough for a backyard movie at night. The right streaming device If the projector doesn't have built-in streaming solutions, you'll need a device to stream the content you want. The laptop is a simple solution, although it is neither elegant nor comfortable. A better strategy is to buy one of the best streaming devices available. Nvidia Shield is a great option because of Android TV; however, you could also use Chromecast and just mirror programming from your phone. If you're an Apple user, you can still use Chromecast devices. For the most comfortable experience, as well as access to the Apple TV library, we recommend apple TV. Nvidia Shield also support gaming, so your backyard movie night can also become a family game at night. Wi-Fi Extender If you want to stream a movie from Netflix or Hulu in your backyard, you will need the Internet. However, wi-fi probably does not reach your home wall. The obvious solution might be to use the phone's LTE, and while this might seem appealing given how mundane unlimited data plans have become, video streaming over LTE usually caps at 480p or 720p, which is not ideal if you plan on blowing up an image on a 110-inch screen. Therefore, the best solution is a special Wi-Fi extender. This will allow you to use your home Wi-Fi network, giving you access to better video quality and ensuring that you don't have to rely on a phone that might die in the middle of a movie. For Wi-Fi Extenders, we recommend TP-Link AC2600. It can extend your Wi-Fi coverage by 14,000 feet, which is more than enough to cover your backyard. It is also equipped with a built-in high-speed mode that prioritises a stable connection. This means that during streaming, you won't have to worry about bumpers or quality immersion. Conclusion There are plenty of other things to think about when planning your own outdoor home theater. If you're planning on having people over, you should think about snacks, seats, and ways to weather-resistant events. To show happen though, the above products are the bare minimum you will need.
