(Bloomberg) -- Billionaire Elon Musk said it's impossible to take Tesla Inc. private now, though he would like to spend more time on innovation. The duties of the Tesla public company are a much bigger factor, but staying private is impossible now (sighing), Musk said in response to a tweet saying he should optimize his time in areas such as innovation. The engineering, design & general enterprise operations absorb the vast majority of my mind and are the fundamental limitation to do more. Tesla shares, which were included in the S&P 500 index this week, rose eight-fold this year before adding to the benchmark measure. The gain is twice the advance of the next best performance on the meter. The jump in the stock price also created millionaires among its investors, and boosted Musk's net worth by $132.2 billion to $159.7 billion, making him the second richest person in the world, according to the Bloomberg Billionaires Index.Bloomberg Wealth: The Tesla Investors Who Are Now MillionairesMusk also said that Starlink, SpaceX's space internet business , would probably be a candidate in his group to become public once his revenue growth becomes reasonably predictable, echoing similar comments from the company's chairman to investors earlier this year. Space Exploration Technologies Corp. has launched more than 240 satellites to build Starlink, President Gwynne Shotwell said at a private investor event in February. A listing would give investors the chance to buy one of the most promising transactions within the closed company. At the moment, we're a private company, but Starlink is the right kind of business that we can go ahead and go public, she said then. Investors have so far limited ways to own a piece of SpaceX, which has become one of the richest and most supported companies in the U.S., dominating the commercial rocket industry. In addition to a NASA contract for a version of its next-generation Starship spacecraft that could land astronauts on the Moon in 2024, SpaceX also has an agreement with a Japanese entrepreneur for a private flight around the Moon in 2023. And it will be ready to launch its first Starship flight to Mars in 2026, Musk said earlier this month. Editor's Note: The 12 Best Stocks to Buy for a Full New Year of Returns in 2021 was previously published on December 4. Since then, it has been updated to include most relevant available.] In July, I recommended seven of the best stocks to buy for 2021 and beyond. As a group, they did well in the last three months. For example, Livongo Health was acquired by Teladoc Health (NYSE:TDOC) on October 30 for $11.33 per spot share and 0.592 times its stake in Teladoc. But looking for a small twist in my stock selection process, I've decided that this list will be based on the first letter of all 12 months. This means that my stock choice for January will have a corporate name starting with J, then an F for February, and so on. InvestorPlace - Stock Market News, Stock Advice & Trading Tips 7 Undervalued Stocks That Could Soar in 2021 All 12 will also have a market capitalization of $2 billion or more and positive free cash flow for the next 12 months. At this point next year, I am confident that my choices, overall, will not disappoint. So without further ado, here are my 12 best stocks for a new year: Johnson & Johnson (NYSE:JNJ) Fidelity National Information Services (NYSE:FIS) McDonald's (NYSE:MCD) Adobe (NASDAQ:ADBE) MercadoLibre (NASDAQ:MELI) Johnson Controls (NYSE:JCI) Jeld-Wen Holding (NYSE:JELD) Apple (NASDAQ:NASDAQ:NASDAQ:AAPL) SVB Financial (NASDAQ:SIVB) Otis Worldwide (NYSE:OTIS) NextEra Energy (NYSE:NEE) Dollar General (NYSE:DG) Shares to Buy: Johnson & Johnson (JNJ) Source: Alexander Tolstykh/Shutterstock.com Johnson & Johnson represents the month of January on my list of the best stocks to buy for 2021. Now, you're having a year on the side of the markets. Its total return for the year so far (YTD) through December 4 is only 2.6%. Based on a 12-month free cash flow (FCF) of $18.3 billion and a current company value (EV) of more than $399 billion, JNJ's FCF income is reasonable at 4.7%. It may not be worthwhile territory - I consider anything above 8% cheap - but it's pretty good. As InvestorPlace colleague Faisal Humayun recently stated, JNJ's stock has an excellent product offering. From a business standpoint, the company offers diversified exposure to consumer health, medicines and medical devices segments, Humayun wrote. The company's pharmaceutical growth for the third quarter of 2020 was impressive, with most therapeutic areas delivering strong numbers. Not to mention that the JNJ is still very much in the race for the Covid-19 vaccine. This suggests that 2021 may be a breakout year for this Dividend Aristocrat. Fidelity National Information Services (FIS) Source: Maryna Pleshkun/Shutterstock.com Next on my list of the best stocks to buy is Fidelity National Information Services, representing the month of February. This payment processor is having a disheartening year relative to U.S. markets as a whole. He's only a fraction smaller than he did this time last year. Based on a flow of 12-month free of $2.57 billion and a business value of $109.75 billion, but Fidelity National's FCF income is very decent at 3.8%. You won't find a lot of comments comments InvestorsIn contributors in this action, despite having a role to play on the technological side of the financial services sector. 7 Growth Actions You Don't Want to Sleep However, on November 19, the Florida-based company announced that it won first place for the sixth consecutive year in a ranking of 100 leading suppliers in risk technology and compliance. In addition, while Covid-19 slowed the rate at which FIS can process transactions, it still managed to generate organic revenue growth during its third quarter of 1 percent to about $3.2 billion. The company also increased adjusted net income by 18% to $887 million. So this is not a glamorous stock, but its services are certainly in demand. McDonald's (MCD) Source: CHALERMPHON SRISANG / Shutterstock.com To represent March for next year, I chose the golden arches of MCD shares. Like many of the names on this list, McDonald's has a good year, rising about 7% of YTD. This is better than many of his restaurant colleagues, but is following the U.S. markets as a whole. Thanks to the Covid-19 outages, McDonald's, which is losing 12 months of free cash flow, is not as strong as it normally is now at $4.25 billion. Currently, the industry leader has an FCF yield of 2.7% based on a business value of about $205 billion. Despite operating in one of the hardest hit industries, McDonald's continued to look beyond the new coronavirus, continually finding ways to transform its business without disturbing the core customer. For example, the company recently gave Beyond Meat (NASDAQ:BYND) the cold shoulder when it announced it would be testing a line of meatless alternatives by 2021, including the McPlant burger. Interestingly - despite developing the plant-based burger with beyond meat entry - the fast-food company decided to go its own way. The decision to go on their own was the result of two reasons. First, MCD didn't want to alienate its meat-loving customers. Secondly, you are not a fan of letting licensees and other brands into your home. Besides the Flesh would certainly have taken some luster from the Golden Arches. McDonald's has been through a tough time, but it always recovers. That makes it one of the best stocks to buy for next year. Adobe (ADBE) Source: r.classn/Shutterstock.com Adobe, the mind behind PDF and more, is my choice for the month of April. It's having an excellent year in the markets right now, with a total YTD return of more than 47%. This is considerably better than its software peers and the US markets as a whole, making it one of the best stocks to buy right now. Adobe's 12-month free cash flow is $4.9 billion, while its corporate value is nearly $232 million fcf yield of 2.1%. Both its business value and multiple EV-EBITDA have also increased dramatically in the last five years. 8 8 Shares to buy in a changing sector In 2016, the company had a business value of $48 billion and an EV EBITDA of 26.1. Currently, the stock has an EV-EBITDA multiple of 48.3. In early February, I said adbe shares were almost certain to reach $400 by 2020. He did and then some. Moving on, I think it's almost certain to reach maybe $600 by 2021. MercadoLibre (MELI) Source: rafapress/Shutterstock.com MercadoLibre is sometimes referred to as the Amazon (NASDAQ:AMZN) of Latin America, although it is more like Alibaba (NYSE:BABA). For my list of the best stocks to buy in 2021, represents the month of May. Currently, MELI shares are having a fantastic year in the markets with a total Return of YTD of almost 200%. Like Adobe, MercadoLibre is doing much better than its internet retail peers and U.S. markets as a whole. This company's 12-month free cash flow is $810 million, while its corporate value is nearly $76 billion for an FCF yield of 1.1 percent. While this may seem low, MercadoLibre's free cash flow has never been higher. Similarly, their recipes are on fire and growing like the weeds. True to the comparison with Amazon, this name will also likely see exponential growth in its free cash flow in the coming years. I've been a fan of the company since 2013, when it was trading around $120. At the time, I argued that he had a dominant position in Latin American e-commerce and his actions would benefit from it. As I write this, the shares are priced around $1,700 and rising in 2021. Johnson Controls (JCI) Source: Shutterstock There aren't many large companies with a J as the first letter in its name. There is even less with strong free cash flow. However, Johnson Controls represents the month of June on my list of the best stocks to buy. Interestingly, while it's only equaling the YTD performance of U.S. markets as a whole, JCI's shares are doing better in 2020 than in some time. Over the past five years, it has delivered a total annualized return to shareholders of about 9.1%, well below the markets. However, with an increase of almost 14% in the last three months, the company appears to be gaining speed towards 2021. In early November, Johnson Controls also announced its fourth-quarter results, which were excellent despite the challenging business environment. In fiscal 2020, it had sales of $22.3 billion and net income of $1.69 billion, stable for a year earlier. 7 Biotechnology Stocks To Buy Beyond Covid Vaccine Plays This is not bad for a company that manufactures, installs and services products designed for offices, industrial properties and other types of commercial real estate — all of which have been pandemic. Johnson Controls' 12-month free cash flow is nearly $1.8 billion, while its corporate value is about $39 billion for fcf revenue from I see JCI as a good deed for risk-averse investors who also enjoy a bit of dividend profit —their dividend yield is 2.28% at the moment. Jeld-Wen Holding (JELD) Source: IgorGolovniov/Shutterstock.com By far the smallest of the 12 names on this list, JELD's shares have a market capitalization of $2.42 billion. This maker of windows and doors represents the month of July in my best list of stocks to buy. In late January 2017, Jeld-Wen went public for $23 per share. Now, though – if you bought shares in your IPO and are still holding – you almost made no money on your investment. In the year-to-date, it has a total return well below the growing returns of its peer group of construction products and equipment industries. These actions benefited mainly from Covid-19. The company's 12-month free cash flow is $250 million, while its business value is $3.8 billion for an FCF yield of 11.3%. However, on November 3, the company reported better third-quarter results than analysts' expectations. At the top of the line, revenue was $1.11 billion, $2 million above consensus. In the final result, it had adjusted earnings per share to 52 cents, eight cents above analysts' expectations. Consumers' focus on their homes, along with our strategy of delivering profitable market share with key customers, is driving increased demand for products in new residential construction and repair and refurbishment channels, said President and CEO Gary Michel. As the focus remains on the houses in 2021, I hope Jeld-Wen will get out of his funk and do well. Apple (AAPL) Source: WeDesing/Shutterstock.com For August, the famous iPhone maker is the next choice on this list. However, if there was a month starting with the letter B, I would recommend Berkshire Hathaway (NYSE:BRK. A, NYSE:BRK. B) because it is a much better value game and happens to own almost 965 million shares of AAPL. Apple's total YTD return is over 66%, which is pretty common, given its annualized total return of nearly 30% over the past 15 years. I'd take it every day of the week. As for free cash flow and the company's value, it is almost $73.4 billion and $2.1 trillion, respectively. It is an FCF yield of 3.5%, an excellent valuation for one of the largest public companies in the world. Simply put, Apple has become much more than a smartphone maker. 7 Inventories of electric vehicles with style and substance According to AppleInsider.com, Apple's new M1-equipped Mac mini jumped to number one in sales in the Japanese desktop computer market —after just two weeks of availability. In addition, Apple now has a market share of 27% in Japan, compared to about 13% a year earlier. So I don't think you can go wrong owning Apple in the long run. Clearly, it is one of the best stocks to buy for next year. SVB Financial (SIVB) (SIVB) Shutterstock Next, representing the month of September is my favorite bank in the USA. SVB Financial is the holding company that operates Silicon Valley Bank, a financial institution based in Santa Clara, which focuses on entrepreneurs and innovators. Now, you're having an amazing year compared to the regional bank peers. While SIVB shares are up nearly 43% from YTD, most of its peers are down. It's also putting U.S. markets in the dust. That said, I won't bother noticing the free cash flow for this name because it's not significant for banking institutions. Instead, the balance sheet is the most important. SIVB reported third-quarter 2020 results that included earnings per share of $8.47, nearly double the $4.42 per share it earned a year earlier. We had an exceptional quarter driven by balance sheet growth, higher core rate revenue, strong investment bank revenue, solid credit resulting in a reduction in reserves and outdated capital gains related to customer IPO activity, noted President and CEO Greg Becker. These results reflect the resilience of our markets and our ability to execute effectively. SIVB was on my 2013 list of the top five stocks to buy for the next 20 years up there with Amazon. I think you owe it to yourself to check in 2021. Otis Worldwide (OTIS) Source: rafapress/shutterstock.com In early April, this elevator company moved away from United Technologies, which merged with Raytheon (NYSE:RTX) to become one of the world's largest aerospace and defense companies. Although it does not have a full 12-month history until April, this representative for the month of October increased 43.5% of YTD, suggesting that 2021 could perform excellently. Over the next 12 months, Otis has a free cash flow of $1.47 billion and a business value of about $33 billion. This makes an FCF yield of 5.2%, so it is reasonably expensive. In addition, the company's third-quarter results show that it is holding itself during the pandemic. First-line organic sales fell 1.2% in the third quarter of 2020 to $3.3 billion, while its operating profit grew 7% on an adjusted non-GAAP basis. In addition, operating margins increased 120 basis points to 15.4%. 8 Battery stocks on which electric vehicle companies depend in November, Toronto-based OTIS portfolio manager Christine Poole made OTIS shares one of her top three choices in BNN Bloomberg's Market Call, suggesting that her 17% share in the global elevator market becomes an excellent long-term investment with an excellent balance between sales and service, at 57% and 43% respectively. This makes him worthy of this list of shares to buy for 2021. Can you say recurring recipe? NextEra Energy (NEE) Source: madameF/Shutterstock.com Recently, I recommended this Florida-based utilities company because of its renewable energy business, NextEra Energy Resources, which generates nearly 40% of the total I maintain that nee shares is one of the best stocks to buy for 2021, representing the month of November on this list. Nee actions are a thing of beauty if consistent returns are your thing. YTD, up about 20%. In the last three, five and 10 years, total returns of 25.1%, 26.8% and 20.5%, respectively, annualized returns. Let's say you're crushing your peers for any of these periods. NextEra's free cash flow over the next 12 months is $2.1 billion, while its corporate value is $190 billion, for an FCF yield of -3.2%. So it's certainly not cheap. But InvestorPlace's Mark Hake made an interesting remark on November 25 when he suggested that NextEra would buy another utility with its strong stock price. As Hake would agree, this is Capital Allocation 101. NextEra made openings for Duke Energy (NYSE:DUK) and Evergy (NYSE:EVRG). They both rejected the offers. However, I'm sure something will shake up soon. As Hake said, an offer may come with more money. What I know for sure is that NextEra is one of the best-executed utilities in North America. Dollar General (DG) Source: Jonathan Weiss / Shutterstock.com Representing the last month of the year is Dollar General, the dollar discount network with 17,000 locations in 46 states. It's having another strong year, almost 37% of YTD. Combine this with a 10-year annualized total return of 20.8%, and you have a great long-term investment. As for 12-month free cash flow, it has $3.1 billion, along with a corporate value of nearly $64 billion. At the moment, its FCF yield is 5.9%. On November 14, the company announced the opening of its 17,000th store in Fountain, Colorado. As a nice gesture to the community, Dollar General has given $17,000 to one of the local schools. Since our founding more than 80 years ago, we have remained focused on helping customers save time and money, CEO Todd Vasos said in the company's press release announcing the occasion. In my book, helping clients save time and money are the hallmarks of any successful business. In November, I also recommended Dollar General as one of three relative value stocks compared to Nio (NYSE:NIO), a Chinese electric vehicle manufacturer. And although I like Nio in the long run, it's not a name to buy in the short term at current prices. DG's actions are much more on the spot. While workers need to save money, Dollar General's business remains a solid bet. In turn, this makes it one of the best stocks to buy entering the uncertainty of 2021. Despite the new coronavirus pandemic, 2020 was a strong year for stocks, and some new stocks growth in particular. The collapse of March may have caused the explosion of the ulcers of some investors. However, it paved the way for major indices such as the Nasdaq and S&P 500 reached new highs in the following months. So-called stay-at-home stocks like Zoom Video (NASDAQ:ZM) and Peloton (NASDAQ:PTON) rose more than 400%, while technology leaders like Apple (NASDAQ:APPL) (NASDAQ:APPL) Nvidia (NASDAQ:NVDA) saw its stock prices more than double in the year. So where is growth likely to come from in 2021? Will these actions remain stars or will other growth stocks steal the spotlight? 7 Short-Term Stocks to Buy for a Happy New Year Many investors are betting on the reopening game as more people are vaccinated against Covid-19 and the U.S. economy reopens in earnest. Others are betting on a continued shift in capital in cyclical stocks. But whatever happens, not all growth actions are created in the same direction by 2021. With that in mind, here are four growth stocks that could double in the next 12 months:InvestorPlace - Stock Market News, Stock Advice & Trading Tips Coty (NYSE:COTY) Draftkings (NASDAQ:DKNG) Qualcomm (NASDAQ:QCOM) UPS (NYSE:UPS) Growth Stocks That Should Double: Coty (COTY) Source: Konektus Photo/Shutterstock.com A$7 per share, COTY shares are barely out of the stock range. But despite its relatively inexpensive valuation, the beauty retailer's shares specializing in fragrances, cosmetics, skin care and nail care have increased sharply in recent months. In a five-day trading session at the end of November, Coty's share price rose 48%. Since October 1, the stock has risen 145%. The impressive growth was driven by a better-than-expected earnings report that bolstered the turnaround effort the company is being successful. An announcement that Coty would complete the sale of its professional wella hair care business to KKR (NYSE:KKR) also gave a rise in the stock price. Specifically, Coty reported a surprise profit for its first fiscal quarter, announced on November 4. The company posted adjusted earnings per share of 11 cents, compared with the 5 cents per share loss analysts had predicted. The surprise profit was also a vote of confidence in Coty's new chief executive, Sue Nabi, who is the company's third CEO in a year. Wall Street is now hopeful that Sue Nabi is taking Coty in the right direction after several failed turnaround attempts for the cosmetics company that has been in business since 1904. COTY shares took a new boost when it was announced that a 60% stake in Wella would be sold to KKR for $2.5 billion by the end of November. Coty will retain its remaining 40 percent stake in Wella and said it plans to use $2 billion of the funds to pay off debts. All these steps position Coty for continued success in 2021. Draftkings (DKNG) Source: Lori Butcher/Shutterstock.com With the widespread distribution of a Covid-19 vaccine, sports should actually return by 2021. We are talking about all sports - football March Madness, the Olympics and so on. Professional basketball, baseball, football and hockey should welcome fans back to the stadiums and resume their regular schedules. And it all fits well for sports betting operator Draftkings. O O which became public through a special takeover agreement (SPAC) in June 2020, saw its share price rise 29% in the last six months to $53.90. But this past year has been extremely difficult in the sports world and in the main business of sports betting. Many of Draftkings' most lucrative sporting events, such as March Madness, were canceled last year. This called into question the future of DKNG's shares, but managed to stay strong this year regardless. 7 Vegan Stocks to Buy Now for the Future of Food In 2021, DKNG shares should do much better. Not only will most major sporting events resume normally in the New Year, but there are growing expectations that more U.S. states will legalize sports betting in the coming months. Analysts at Oppenheimer have recently noted that many states face revenue shortfall due to the Covid-19 pandemic, and as budget deficits increase, they may turn to sports betting as a new source of revenue. Oppenheimer expects New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Ohio to legalize sports betting next year. This would certainly help take DKNG's shares to new heights. Qualcomm (QCOM) Source: jejim/Shutterstock.com Despite its irregular launch so far, the wireless 5G is here and will become the dominant form of advancing connectivity. And several companies are positioned to capitalize on the 5G revolution that is expected to take society into new technological fields. Qualcomm is one of the companies that is likely to reap rewards from 5G. The semiconductor and software manufacturer is benefiting from the use of its microchips in various 5G wireless technologies and platforms. In particular, Qualcomm chips are being inserted into a growing number of Android 5G phones. Qualcomm is not only at the forefront of the 5G revolution, it is making the 5G revolution possible. Qualcomm's stock price has more than doubled since March 2020, rising 144% to $147.42 per share. And analysts see big things ahead for stocks. Morgan Stanley named Qualcomm as one of the top 10 stocks to benefit from the global launch of 5G. Other analysts covering the company have a median price target of $165 per share in Qualcomm shares, with a high estimate of $200. Given the continued launch and adoption of 5G networks and technologies around the world, next year looks very bright for Qualcomm and its shareholders. UPS (UPS) Source: Sundry Photography/Shutterstock.com Not only is UPS still benefiting from people who order online while taking shelter at home, but the delivery and logistics company is also ready to reap benefits from the launch covid-19 vaccines in the United States and around the world. This is the time for companies like UPS to shine, and the Atlanta, Georgia-based company is doing just that. UPS is increasing its its and working twice as hard to meet unprecedented demand and help all of us get through the global pandemic. These efforts have helped UPS shares reach new heights, rising 113 percent since March to $175.18 per share. Heading into 2021, UPS has momentum at its side. The company saw strong gains in its third-quarter earnings. Specifically, the company's revenue grew 16 percent from a year earlier to $21.2 billion, and its earnings per share increased 10% to $2.28 per share. This exceeded analysts' expectations for EPS of $1.90 per share. Although UPS declined to provide prior guidance on its earnings, the company aggressively expanded its North American operations throughout 2020. 9 Strong-performing stocks to sell before the end of the year in Canada, for example, UPS has opened a new $800 million package delivery and sorting hub. The company also hired more than 5,000 employees amid the pandemic. As such, the company shows no signs of slowing down towards the New Year. Things are going from bad to worse for Nikola (NKLA). For a stock that was on fire during the first half of the year, the electric truck maker's downfall was brutal. A series of events – allegations of fraud committed by founder Trevor Milton, his subsequent resignation, a severely discouraging deal with General Motors – sent investors to the exit gates. Now it seems that until the trash wants nothing to do with Nikola.Na Wednesday, the company announced that its plan to design and build BEV garbage trucks for garbage collection company Republic Services has collapsed. The company that the cost to build the trucks would be higher than expected and would take a long time, after both sides concluded that the construction of the garbage truck using the Nikola Tre as a base does not work. The market, of course, did not like the latest setback and the stock fell almost 20% in the last two trading sessions. Deutsche Bank analyst Emmanuel Rosner puts the disappointment in the fact that RSG was Nikola Tre's only external client announced so far, and has been perceived as providing some external validation of its economy. However, taking a positive turn in the process, the analyst thinks that the termination of the agreement may work in Nikola's favor. The garbage truck would have required large expenses that were not necessarily transferable to other major business activities and the TAM is also relatively small, the analyst noted. That said, Nikola has other issues to face; the analyst is uncomfortable with the development of Nikola's BEV truck, which is scheduled for the end of 2021. Although the first trucks have been manufactured and are currently in the testing phase, no customers have been announced yet, and Nikola's economy with him can be unfavorable for years. Overall, Rosner summarized, We remain on the sidelines of NKLA, and will closely study some of the milestones expected to be announced in 1S21, including a potential hydrogen infrastructure partner. So the analyst evaluates NKLA's stock in a Hold, although he may well have said Buy —because his price target of $26 implies an 88% advantage over current levels. (To watch Rosner's history, click here) Rosner's colleagues think Nikola's worth a punt. The average price target is a touch higher than Rosner's and at $26.67 it implies gains of 92.5%. In semathis, the stock has a Moderate Buy consensus rating based on 3 Buys, 4 Holds and 1 Sell. Notice: The opinions expressed in this article are exclusively from the prominent analyst. The content is intended to be used for informational purposes only. It is very important to do your own analysis before making any investment. The decades-old battery maker went public when it merged into an SPAC in November. Since then, its stock has had a noticeable increase. Because it's a mystery. This article will explain what cents are and discuss four cents below $1 to watch as small cap stocks continue a hot wave this winter. The first thing is, what are cents? In short, these are shares of companies that trade for less than $5. Penny's shares are well known for their volatility, as well as just their cheap price. But if you're looking at stocks below $1 or a closer to $5, it's important to keep a few things in mind. understand what you are buying and why you are buying. Just saying that trading stocks isn't the goal. You are in the market to do do So identifying inbound and outbound targets are obviously important. Also, it's that you should have a basic strategy in mind. Are you looking at the day trading pennies or do you have a long-term idea in mind? In addition, it is important to explain the fluctuations in price and how quickly they are happening. Small-Cap shares continue their hot streak Why would anyone want to buy pennies now? Case in point, small cap stocks are very hot right now. Check out the reference ETF, the Russell 2000 (IWM). As the S&P, Dow and even nasdaq struggle to maintain an uptrend, the IWM made new all-time highs on Wednesday. Considering the strength in small cap stocks - especially stocks below $1 - it's prudent to at least have some trend names on your watch list. When finding pennies to buy, be sure to evaluate each trade independently and plan accordingly. Most did not plan to invest in cent stocks that are rising and falling 50% in seconds. Also, day traders wouldn't normally jump into a stock that barely floats in price. As a general rule, the lower the price, the higher the volatility. This is simply because a small movement in price equates to a larger percentage change. With that in mind, are any of these stocks below $1 on your watch list right now? Tonix Pharmaceuticals Tonix Pharmaceuticals Holding Corp. (NASDAQ: TNXP) is another stock of cents below $1 gaining steam before the end of the year. This week, the company came out with the news that it has finished buying about 44 acres in Montana. This will be the place for the development and manufacture of vaccines. This also increases the company's growing footprint. A few months ago, Tonix also purchased a 40,000-square-foot facility in Massachusetts. These two facilities will support the development and production of the company's vaccine candidates. If you are new to the history of TNXP's actions, the company is currently developing the TNX-1800 as a potential COVID-19 vaccine as well as TNX-801 for a smallpox/smallpox vaccine. Specifically, the TNX-1800 has been a center of attention as you can imagine. Many stocks of coronavirus vaccines have aroused interest in recent months. In this case, Tonix intends to report efficacy data from animal challenge studies of the vaccine candidate in the next quarter. Biolase Biolase Inc (NASDAQ: BIOL) is another of the lower-priced cent stocks that make moves at the end of the year. Just this week, the currency's shares rose from about $0.27 to more than $0.31. Although this is only a move of $0.04, it equates to a nearly 15% jump in price since Monday. Unlike other biotechnologies, Biolase is focused on products used in oral health. The company's main products are dental laser systems that perform a wide range of procedures, including aesthetic and complex surgical applications. Last month, the company launched launched Endo Academy to foster education and best practices to integrate Waterlase technology into clinical environments. As endodontists continue to seek more advanced solutions to challenging cases, the academy will serve as a resource for some of the greatest minds in the field to elevate the spread of best practices for integrating advanced technologies like Waterlase, said Todd Norbe, president and CEO of Biolase.Jaguar Health Inc. (NASDAQ: JAGX) continued to rise this week. Wednesday saw the cent shares further extend their December earnings and reach highs of more than $0.90. Although we've reported on the company for weeks, this week's biggest move comes after Jaguar's latest update. The company signed an agreement for an undiluted royalty financing transaction. Jaguar will sell a stake in future royalties from its Mytesi® (crofelemer) and lechlemer for an aggregate purchase price of $6 million. Lisa Conte, President and CEO of Jaguar, explained that: The timing of this transaction is aligned with the progress of the recently initiated phase 3 ctd test, for which patient enrollment is progressing. Also remember that the company held preliminary discussions with the Swiss Growth Forum, sponsor of a European special purpose acquisition company, Post Pandemic Recovery Equity. There is a potential agreement with SPAC and an operating subsidiary of Jaguar to be established in Europe with an exclusive license to crofelemer and Mytesi for indications of inflammatory diarrhea and HIV-related diarrhea. A Senseonics Holdings Inc. (NYSE: SENS) started shooting this week after a major u.S. patent victory. Senseonics has received a patent entitled Remotely powered sensing system with multiple sensing devices. Considering that the company is a medical device company, patent wins are very useful. Senseonics implantable glucose monitoring systems are used by patients with diabetes. The company's CGM systems, Eversense® and Eversense® XL, include a small sensor inserted under the skin. This communicates with an intelligent transmitter used on the sensor. The data is then sent every five minutes to a mobile app on the user's smartphone. Adding to the reasons for watching senseonics, earlier this year the company entered into a collaboration with Ascensia Diabetes Care, a global diabetes care company. Going into early 2021, there are a few things that traders are following. One of these things is the start of commercial activities outside the U.S. with the help of Ascensia. The company also expects a decision on approval of its Eversense product by the FDA in the first half of the year. Chinese authorities are investigating an e-commerce giant, Google may be tightening its control over the search and The VCs weigh in on the biggest surprises of the year. China's State Market Regulation Administration said it is investigating the e-commerce giant over a policy that forces traders to sell exclusively with Alibaba and skip rival platforms JD.com and Pinduoduo. Alibaba will actively cooperate with regulators in the investigation, the company said in a statement. (Bloomberg) -- Alibaba Group Holding's U.S.-listed shares fell more than all-time in concern about China's investigation into alleged monopolistic practices at the e-commerce company. Affiliate Ant Group Co., the other pillar of billionaire Jack Ma's internet empire, has also been summoned to a high-level meeting on financial regulations. The pressure on Ma is central to China's broader effort to control an increasingly influential internet sphere: the draft anti-monopoly rules launched in November gave the government ample latitude to contain entrepreneurs who until recently enjoyed unusual freedom to expand their kingdoms. Alibaba's investigation is a warning that winds have changed, Bloomberg Intelligence said in a research note. The risk, wrote analyst Vey-Sern Ling, is that business operations could face long-term headwinds as a result of such moves. The stock fell 13% in its biggest one-day drop on record. The decline took Alibaba to its lowest level since July, and shares fell 30% from october's peak. About 141 million shares have changed hands, most in a single session since its debut in 2014. Alibaba said in a statement that it will cooperate with regulators in its investigation, and that its operations remain normal. Once hailed as drivers of economic prosperity and symbols of the country's technological prowess, Alibaba and rivals such as Tencent Holdings Ltd. face increasing pressure from regulators after amassing hundreds of millions of users and gaining influence over almost every aspect of everyday life in China. It is clearly an escalation of coordinated efforts to control the Empire of Jack Ma, which symbolized China's new entities too large to fail, said Dong Ximiao, a researcher at the Zhongguancun Internet Finance Institute. The Chinese authorities want to see a smaller, less dominant and more compatible company. Read more: Jack Ma stays quiet after The Group's Spectacular Undo State Administration for Market Regulation is investigating Alibaba, the leading antitrust watchdog said in a statement without further details. Regulators, including the central bank and the banking watchdog, will separately take ant affiliate d'or to a meeting home financial regulations, which now pose a threat to the growth of the world's largest online financial services company. Ant said in a statement on its official WeChat account that it will study and meet all requirements. Ma, the flamboyant co-founder of Alibaba and Ant, has disappeared from public opinion since Ant's initial public offering was derailed last month. In early December, the man most identified with the meteoric rise of China Inc. was advised by the government to remain in the country, said a person familiar with the matter. Ma is not on the verge of a personal fall, said those familiar with the situation. His public rebuke is instead a warning that Beijing has lost patience with the power of its tech moguls, increasingly perceived as a threat to political and financial stability that President Xi Jinping values most. Alibaba slid 8% in Hong Kong for a fifth month on Thursday. Asia's largest company after Tencent led losses among China's internet industry leaders since Ant's IPO was pulled, bringing the global toll to about $200 billion. Tencent and internet services giant Meituan finished more than 2.6 percent lower, while SoftBank Group Corp., Alibaba's largest shareholder, sank 1.7 percent in Tokyo.As China prepares to implement the new antitrust regulations, the country's leaders said little about how severely they plan to crack down or why they decided to act now. China's internet ecosystem -- long protected from competition by people like Google and Facebook -- is dominated by two companies, Alibaba and Tencent, through a labious investment network that spans the vast majority of the country's startups in ai and digital finance arenas. Its sponsorship has also prepared a new generation of titans, including food and travel giant Meituan and Didi Chuxing - China's Uber. Those who thrive outside their orbit, the largest being the owner of TikTok ByteDance Ltd., are rare. The House that Jack Ma built is China's own creation: Tim Culpan's anti-monopoly rules now threaten to disrupt this status quo with a series of potential outcomes, from a benign scenario of fines to a disruption of industry leaders. Some analysts predict there is a crackdown coming, but a target. They point to language in regulations that suggests a big focus on online commerce, from forced exclusive deals with traders known as Choice One of Two to algorithm-based pricing favoring new users. The regulations specifically warn against selling at low cost to eliminate rivals. But Beijing's various agencies seem to be coordinating their efforts - a bad signal for the internet sector. There is nothing that the Chinese Communist not control and anything that seems to be spinning out of its orbit anyway will be pulled very quickly, said Alex Capri, a Singapore-based researcher at the Hinrich Foundation.Read more: Below $290 billion, investors in China Tech's Mull Nightmare ScenariosThe campaign against Alibaba and its peers went on a high-speed in November after Ma attacked Chinese regulators in a public speech for delays in the times. Market supervisors subsequently suspended Ant's IPO - the world's largest at $35 billion - while the antitrust watchdog threw the markets into a tailspin shortly after with its bill. The People's Daily warned Thursday that fighting alleged monopolies was now a top priority. The antimonopoly has become an urgent issue with respect to all issues, said in a commentary coinciding with the announcement of the probe. Wild growth in markets needs to be constrained by law, he added. The Communist Party spokesman said in a commentary on Friday that Chinese internet companies should consider the alibaba inquiry as an opportunity to improve their awareness of fair competition and anti-monopoly practices. The chances that Ant will be able to revive its massive stock listing next year are looking increasingly small as China revises the rules governing the fintech industry, which in recent years has grown as an alternative to traditional state-backed loans. It is said that China separately set up a joint task force to oversee Ant, led by the Financial Stability and Development Committee, a financial system regulator, along with several central bank departments and other regulators. The group is in regular contact with Ant to collect data and other materials, studying its restructuring, as well as drafting other rules for the fintech sector. China has simplified much of the bureaucracy, so it's easier for different regulators to work together now, said Mark Tanner, managing director of Shanghai-based consultancy China Skinny. Of all the regulatory hurdles, this is the biggest one by a long shot. Dissecing China's crackdown on its Internet giants: QuickTake (Updates with daily comments from the people in paragraph 18.) What happened: On Wednesday, Inovio published an article including Phase 1 data on the INO-4800, which was found to have been immunogenic in all test subjects. In addition, phase 1 testing does not serious adverse safety events and only six grade I adverse events, which were mostly minor reactions at the injection site. Related link: Why a COVID-19 vaccine makes General Electric's actions 'more investing'Why it's important: Inovio Inovio Inovio's ino-4800 coronavirus vaccine did not come close to winning the race to the market, given that vaccines from Pfizer Inc. (NYSE: PFE) and Modern Inc (NASDAQ: MRNA) are already authorized by the FDA. However, moderna's vaccine should be stored and transported at temperatures of 20 Celsius negative, and the Pfizer vaccine must be stored and transported at temperatures of negative 70 Celsius, colder than winter temperatures in Antarctica.INO-4800, on the other hand, is stable at room temperature for more than a year. It also does not need to be frozen during transport storage, potentially making it faster and more economical to distribute. Inovio's shares rose 205% year-on-year, but have fallen 53.3% in the past six months as competing vaccine candidates have apparently advanced in the race to fight the pandemic. Take from Benzinga: Assuming it is as effective and safe as competing vaccines, the Inovio candidate may end up being the standard carrier of covid-19 vaccine variants and future variants of coronavirus vaccines. Analysts have estimated that the global COVID-19 vaccine market could be worth $10 billion a year, so it's understandable why Inovio investors are excited given the company's $1.7 billion market capitalization.
