The most popular potassium iodide potassium iodide tablets urban bug out bag First Aid Complete Toilet Kit losat $12.99 Hatchets & Saws SOG Backcountry Axe Ranging from US$1,000 to US$6,000, Costco emergency food kits, delivered to customers discreetly (according to the retailer) on a pallet, are designed to feed a family of four for a year , reports Business Insider. The most expensive option, a Nutristore brand kit (US$5,999.99), promises a shelf life of up to 30 years for foods such as instant lentils and white rice and over 36,000 total portions. Based on a diet of 2,000 calories per day for the average person, its 600 cans could support four people for a year. In contrast, the cheapest kit (US$999.99) is designed to feed a person for a year at 1,200 calories per day. Enjoy the comfort of knowing that you have the essential foods your family will need to survive an emergency or natural disaster, Costco says on its website. Discreetly packaged for privacy in shipping, pallets are designed to feed a family of four for a year. The CostcoOne reviewer photo wrote about the Thrive-branded option $3,999.99, I hope I never use it! While another referred to it as end-of-the-world insurance as-we-know-it, adding: Be aware that food supply has no real meat. It also serves as an artistic installation living room, if you have the space. Of course you like SunChips' 30-count variety packs and four-pound tuna cans, but as a Costco member, how busy are you really in the concept of bulk shopping? If your answer isn't I'm willing to spend $5,999.99 on a 1-year Nutristore Premium Food Kit so my family of four can survive the apocalypse, then maybe you should wonder why you pay that $60 annual membership fee too. These megapacks are now on sale on Costco's website, along with less intense offerings. (For all of you bachelor survivalists out there, a one-year kit for a single person will set you back just $999.99). The price of the used compact car of the family-friendly option is actually quite reasonable, if you only investigate the contents of the kit without stopping to think about what an absurd amount of food is like for an even more absurd fear: the kit contains 600 cans that pack over 36,000 total portions for you and anyone you want to get out once the End Times or zombies or supreme dictator Trump finally arrives. (The kit can, if everyone wants 2,000 calories a day, feed four people for 12 months, eight for six months or 16 for a meager three.) Your crew can choose between dozens of ingredients - rice, elbow macaroni, liophilized green beans, dehydrated apples, beef and chicken flavored tofu, as well as a product alarmingly labeled butter powder. The best preserved of these products expires in 30 years, so buying the kit honestly suggests a nice view of the glass half-empty civilization. (The Committee on I have to go to crap by 2048, or have you just burned six G?) The kit is delivered as two pallets of boxes that together weigh 1,800 pounds. To keep neighbors in the dark, Costco promises that everything is discreetly packaged. So the reckless Griswolds next door may starve, but your family can relax knowing they have the essential foods your family will need to survive an emergency or natural disaster! It's even better, because you won't have to fight for the territory. Looks like Costco may have blown the marketing angle on this. It's sold under the Emergency Food by the Pallet section of the website - nice gauche - but in recent weeks, consumers have seen Weight Watchers meal kits, Walmart meal kits, even meal kits for the poor if the Trump administration arrives. Costco is expected to sell its 36,000 can packs as the most affordable meal kit on the planet: one delivery per year and your finished. The pallet contains 600 cans of food that can feed four people on an all-round diet of 2,000 calories per day for 12 months, including carbohydrates such as pasta rotini, proteins such as black beans, beef and chicken, as well as fruits including apples and bananas, and liophilized vegetables such as broccoli and green beans. There are also slightly less expensive alternatives, including a $4,699.99 collection of 220 cans of food (for a diet of 1,986 calories per day); or a collection of $3,999.99 of 378 (also good for four people for a year). For context, apocalypse preppers - a subculture of people preparing for the apocalypse - stock up on food, survival gear, and even building to endure a potential cataclysmic disaster like a nuclear attack. Sales of such goods typically increase in competition with scary world events, doomsday preparation retailers say, the owner of NukePills.com told BuzzFeed News in January how President Trump's tweet my button is bigger than your button was a catalyst to increase the sale of radiation protection kits tenfold on a normal day. Previously, traders had told Moneyish that their business was skyrocketing due to threats exchanged between the United States and North Korea last summer. [Kim Jong Un] managed to incredibly beat up our business, said Keith Hillen, owner of the Prep and Save apocalyptic equipment store in California. We had the biggest days we've ever had. Our business [saw] between a 200% and 400% increase. Preppers see the threats of nuclear war as a reason to stock up on products like 72-hour survival kits, food and water, and weapons — like this $24.99 launch axe. At the moment, Hillen's best sellers are gas masks ($40), iodine pills ($15.99), and Geiger counters to measure radioactivity in an area ($200 and above). Hillen says upper-class consumers - doctors, lawyers, architects - coachen much of his customer base, adding that the other big group is military... because they know what's going on out there. Sales are on the rise whenever there is a fire, flood, earthquake or any kind of terrorist or nuclear attack. Preppers shell out impressive money in the name of survival. One prepper, Bob McDevitt of Reno, Nv., told Moneyish that he spent between $150,000 and $200,000 to stock up, including two years of medical equipment, food and water. He now lives full-time in a campervan. For McDevitt, the preparation is much more about practicality than panic. The preparation gives us a reduction and tranquility, similar to having a smoke alarm in the house when you go to bed, he said, adding that, We do not believe in the apocalypse. No one I know does. Apokalid preppers are not as rare as you might imagine. Estimates [say] between 20 and 35 percent of Americans think we can have a nuclear war or something religious will happen that will mean the end of the world, said Dr. Matthew Lorber, a clinical psychiatrist at Lenox Hill Hospital in New York. [Preppers] develops a sense of community and supports each other, Lorber added. There is a feeling of safety and companionship when you get groups of these people who start talking about this and check with each other to make sure they don't forget the materials.
