[4] Plot High School senior Venus Videlmanico is anxious to leave Staten Island for college, but avoids saying to her mother because they are still mourning the death of her older brother. Her friend Sydney becomes popular with nerves: online reality games where people pay to join as players or watch as watchers. Players dare to accept voted on by watchers, try to be the winner of the day and receive financial rewards. Sydney follows Vee's adventurous nature, so Vee has to sign up as a player and record everything on the player's phone, and the money earned if the player fails or balls is revoked and he learns that snitches get stitches. Vee's first dare is how to kiss a stranger in the diner. At the diner, she kissed Ian, who dances and sings to Vee, and revealed that he dared to be another player. Watchers dare to take Ian to Manhattan on his motorbike. In Manhattan, they dare to try out expensive formal attire. Clothes on their streets are stolen, and watchers dare to leave the store, so they run away in their underwear. They return to Ian's bike to find expensive clothes paid for by watchers. Vee dares to get the tattoo chosen by Ian, who dares to ride a motorbike through the blindfolded city at 60mph and uses Vee to maneuver his body. Once completed, two kisses. Vee and Ian will be among the top players in nerves. Jealous of Vee's popularity, Sydney dares to accept at party.Ladder between two buildings. Sydney will be released on bail and removed from the game. Vee catches Sydney making in J.P., boy Vee likes.Vee and Sidney have a big discussion. Tommy reveals that he was looking at Ian's profile. As punishment for the snitch, all the money in her family's bank account disappears. High-ranked player Ty dares to knock her unconscious. Vee wakes up with a shipping container with snitches get stitches on the wall. She runs away and finds Ian, who confesses that he and Ty were players who had their friends dared to be killed. Their family's work, bank accounts, and identities were confiscated when they tried to alert the authorities. Vee is now joining them in the game's secret third category: prisoners. If prisoners can reach and win the final round of the day, they will get everything back. Vee, Tommy and Sydney recruit Tommy's hacker friends to change the game's online code, but it's impossible to simply shut down Nerve because every watcher's phone functions as a distributed server. Vee and Ian will earn two spots in the last dare to take place in BatteryWeed. The winner will be the one who shoots others with the handgun they are given. Ian offers her a win, but when she also refuses to shoot, Ty jumps from the audience instead of Ian and shoots her, and she dies in Ian's arms. Just then, Tommy and his hackers change Nerve's source code to crack the watcher's code name and send them all messages: you're an accessory to murder. All watchers log out immediately, close the game's servers and exit effectively. Ian pointed a gun at Thailand, and Vee suddenly stood up and revealed that she and Ty had staged her killing to scare watchers into dissolution nerves. Production directors Ariel Shulman and Henry Joest have previously dealt with similar themes in documentariesOn their fascination with internet-centric movies, they said, Most things are not black and white. The Internet is not good or bad. It depends on how you use it[6] nerve games give the example of both really empowering games and it's also the most awful thing you can imagine. The coaches aimed to evaluate PG-13, and Shulman said, I wanted young teenagers to be able to see it. We think it has an important message and they will dig it, Joest said, adding that we weren't interested in making a big torture movie. In an attempt to lower the ratings, the director centered on Sex Dare, which was ultimately too dark and strange. The film also has a brighter ending and theme than the book, as the novel deals with darker plots and endings. The team said the rapidly changing nature of the internet has become a difficult theme to make narrative features, noting that the app Periscope came out during film development, which Joest called like on the way to becoming a nerve. In January 2015, it was announced that Emma Roberts and Dave Franco had starred. [4] In April 2015, it was announced that Glenn Kimiko had joined the film's cast to portray the role of a worried friend in Emma Roberts' character. [4] On the same day, rapper Colson Machine Gun Kelly Baker was also announced to have joined the cast. [10] The film's main filming began in New York in 2015.[10][11] production ended on June 5, 2015. [12] It premiered on July 12 at the School of Visual Arts in New York and was attended by the cast[13] and screened at Comic-Con on July 21. The film was scheduled for September 16, 2016, but was released in theaters July 27, 2016. Reception box office Nerve sold $38.6 million in the U.S. and Canada and $46.5 million in other countries, with a global total of $85.2 million and a budget of $19 million. The film was predicted to reach about $10 million in its opening weekend and $15 million in its first five days from 2,538 theaters [the film sold $3.7 million on its opening day and finished eighth in its opening weekend. the critical response to Rotten Tomatoes, which totaled $9.4 million ($15.5 million in total over five days) [the film has an average rating of 5.78/10 and a 67% approval rating based on 138 reviews. A key consensus on the site is that the fast pace of nerves and attractive leads add to teen thrillers that occasionally have enough energy to offset that muddy run and help overcome a number of underlying flaws. On Metacritic, the film has a weighted average score of 58 out of 100 based on 33 critics, indicating mixed or average reviews. [20] AudienceCinemaS scoring by gave the film an average grade of A- on the A+ to F scale. [18] Scott Tobias, of Uproxx, said: The end is a rare virtual thriller in which the game (and film) surrenders to a very smartly orchestrated tsk-tsk-ing morality play, but nerves understand the addictive little subculture that social media can actually function and then spin out of. [21] Lille Deal's Dave Palmer told film 7/10: It's so much fun and not in a way that changes heads either. The movie actually has some smart things to say about teenagers, their phones and what people do to make the internet famous, and it's all delivered in colorful little packages. [22] The film was nominated for the People's Choice Award in the category of Favorite Thriller Movie. Legacy nerves have been mentioned since 2016 in relation to a real-life dare game called the Blue Whale Challenge, which has attracted media attention and shares some similarities to each depicted in the film.
