The depositasis currently contains more than 147 million ounces of gold. Fort Knox - a sorting facility where no visitors are allowed and no exceptions are made - has achieved a legendary status among Americans. Bill Daddio literally holds the key to Fort Knox. He was also an important player in Philip Diehl's extensive change program at the American Mint. As sheriff of the U.S. Mint, Daddio's main challenge is to protect Fort Knox and nearly $73 billion worth of gold and silver in mint facilities. But he also has a second big challenge. As head of the Office of Protection, a new business unit, he is working to create and sell services that will generate additional revenue for Mint, create more opportunities for his officers and help transform a world-renowned organization into a world-class organization. It's a challenge that Daddio, a cigar-loving, baseball-cap-wearing, 18-year Mint veteran, is eager to meet. We had a great brand, he said. What do people say when they want to describe a safe facility? It's as safe as Fort Knox.' Daddio's goal is to re-locate his operations from what he calls a police department store - a small group of officers with a well-defined job - to a top police department with a special mission. It's a small change in language that makes a lot of sense. If the prospect notices that the Mint police are the best in the world at senior security, then expertise can be sold at a handsome profit. The organization can help other federal agencies protect valuable assets that must be moved from one place to another or stored in a secure facility. It can consult with foreign governments on how to build safe facilities for gold and precious metals. The department has never thought about getting involved in a full-time security consulting business, Daddio said. Mint police are now to export their expertise. Daddio's plan to change strategy has required organizational change. Over the years, for all the legendary status of Fort Knox, few members of the law enforcement community knew who the Mint police were or what they did. That means Mint didn't get the choice of recruiting generation. With an average of 60 vacancies per year, and a turnover rate of 20%, Daddio had to do a lot of recruitment - but he had to target retired officers from local departments. Results? An older, whiter unit and more men have the assets it is protecting. How daddio cast a new group of officers? By creating resources for future investment. He and a group of officials at the Mint, working with colleagues on Capitol Hill, funded Section 121 of the Department of Finance and the General Government Appropriations Act. Money alone cannot rejuvenate an organization. But providing a vision of a new type of activity - and then providing more money - creates an undeniably positive climate. People are starting to feel good, Daddio said. They look better, they act better, and they are willing to change. And I became more demanding. I said, 'You've just got a 33% increase. I want more from you.' Daddio also worked to increase the reputation of mint police in law enforcement. He has dispatched employees to the country's top criminal justice programs. He also used one of mint's premium products: a commemorative silver dollar issued in 1997, honoring the National Monument to Law Enforcement Officers. Daddio set out to drum up support for the coin - visit the police department and speak up his activity. He dispatched rank and file officers too - a member of the Mint police who attended the call roll for all units of the New York City Police Department. Those visits generated interest in the Mint police. Now I get dozens of applicants from the NYPD for every open job I have at West Point Mint, daddio marvels.What works in New York City working elsewhere. Last year, mint police received an unprecedented 800 applications for 60 jobs - and, even more notably, nearly 50% of those applicants were women. We'll be the best police department there is, Daddio said confidently. Nothing will stop us. Contact Bill Daddio at U.S. Mint headquarters (202-874-6020). I made my first ring with a stone ins domed. inspired by Pablo Cimadevilal Start with a brass suit, a cap bead and a blue stoneT topas I use a hacksaw and Sandpaper to get a workable sice. Next screwed the beads on and put in the handdrill chuck. This makes it a lot better to sand and file down one Side. And I added a small ledge to weld it to the next round. I only have a small torch in hand that makes it difficult to weld. Because it melts the flow, but until it's hot enough to weld there's already some oxide as you can :D. Now I've come to shape. I carved it round with my trusty Aliexpress (Dremmel) and made 3 Arms which should later keep kicking. Sadly the material broke at two of them so I then had to remove them altogether. Now I polish the ring again with Sandpaper first and then with multitool. This step should be placed stone and bending arms on ... its now glue stone in.if you like this ring, you can find more on instagram: red_headed_makerParticipated in faux-Real Contest The most effective way to know if a ring is real gold is to take it to a jeweler to check. There are also some simple tests that can be done at home. Check the ring for an icon stamped on gold. Real gold ranges from 10K to 24K, with 24K being the highest and most attractive gold content. However, some fake gold is stamped with these symbols. Check to make sure that the ring has no recolors or dark patches. Real gold does not rust, while counterfeit gold and gold-plated items eventually wear out and reveal their true nature. Gold can be checked with nitric acid. Real gold has no reaction to acids, while counterfeit products change color depending on their metal content. Content.
