Although it lacks the classic attraction of the Puget Sound waterfront, you have the Space Needle and many great art venues at your fingertips instead. See more bottom line At first glance, it's not entirely clear how the prominent pineapple-floor mosaic fits into this hotel's theme - we're talking downtown Seattle here, after all , not Maui - but it's the Maxwell Hotel for you: kind of fun, kind of quirky and a bit off the beaten track. The property, which has 139 rooms spread over five floors, sits on The Lower Queen Anne, an area just east of the Seattle Center that caters heavily to Seattle's techies and arts community. Visitors (including pets) are greeted by a large lobby and funky, boutique-y décor (for example: oversized, white, rococo mirror frames paired with mix-and-match upholstered seating). Although you won't find yourself in quick walking distance of classic Seattle attractions (i.e. Pike Place Market or waterfront), at Maxwell, you have the Space Needle, performance venues and a good selection of restaurants at your disposal. As for the pineapple? It is said to have been an amiable welcoming gift back in the era of the American colonies - and for that reason, the out-of-place logo seems to make sense here. See more scene You don't choose Maxwell if you want to hang out on the Seattle waterfront all day, but you choose the place whose business you have on your way to Amazon.com or the Gates Foundation; corporate headquarters for both are literally down the street. It's also an ideal place to stay for those who watch performances at the Opera House, Seattle Repertory Theater, Seattle Center, Experience Music Project, or Northwest Ballet, all of which are located within a few blocks of the hotel. Restaurant choices in the neighborhood are plentiful, and because the area services residents of Queen Anne Hill, you will also find plenty of amenities, like movie theaters, dry cleaners and nail salons. Those who want to go to the west side of downtown - Pike Place Market, say, or Seattle Art Museum - only need to a cross-town bus or take a quick taxi ride.5-minute or go to Seattle Center, including Seattle Repertory Theater, Opera House, and Pacific Northwest Ballet10-minute walk to Space Needle, Science Center, and Experience Music Project (EMP) 10-minute drive to Pike Place Market, Seattle Art Museum, and waterfront.10-minute drive to cruise terminal at Pier 6620 to 30-minute drive to Sea-Tac Airport (about $38-$45 taxi fare) See more location Though see rooms are available , don't confuse this offer with anything you get on the waterfront-side of downtown; en Maxwell Hotel is only five storeys high, at best you have a seriously good view of the Space Needle, but you will have to ignore the concrete underground car park across the street while you do so. The rooms are certainly spacious and eclectic (dark wood floors stand in for carpets, and angular furniture blends with bold fabrics), with bathrooms on the minimalist side - only a few bathtubs are available throughout the hotel. And even if you won't find a pineapple in your room, you might just be greeted with fresh popcorn, local Tim's potato chips and good Seattle coffee.
