It is owned by the Knowledge Network Corporation, a Crown corporation of the Government of British Columbia[1], and began issuing on January 12, 1981. Rudy Buttignol is President and CEO of the Knowledge Network of British Columbia. [2] The Knowledge Network's broadcasting licence is for satellite-cable programming. The network is available on Bell Satellite Television, Channel 268, Shaw Direct Channel 354 and TELUS Optik 117. It has also been broadcast live in remote locations in British Columbia, with repeater sites operated by local volunteers in the few areas of the province where cable television is not available. The network used the CKNO insignior,[3] although the transmitters received digital insigniors with the prefix CH because of its low power. [4] [5] Knowledge receives funding from the B.C. government and donations from the public. [6] The station supports lifelong learning for children and adults by providing quality, ad-free programming through its broadcast channel, websites and applications. Knowledge Network also invests in documentaries and children's programming produced by independent filmmakers and helps develop skills within the independent production community. [7] Overview Knowledge Network is the public educational broadcaster in British Columbia and is to be distributed as part of the basic cable service in British Columbia. When Knowledge first entered in 1981, its broadcast schedule was originally 9:m a.m. to 11:m p.m. In the following years, it was broadcast from 7 a.m. :m to 12 p.m. :m until July 2007, when programming hours were increased to 6:00 a.m.m to 1:m a.m. In late 2007, Knowledge Network began changing its green tree logo to its new wordmark logo, and as of June 2008, the green tree logo was removed. The channel is currently a 24-hour broadcaster. The network averages 1.5 million viewers, more than one-third of British Columbians per Currently, in the province, the station is number one on weekday mornings for children aged two to six. In addition, it has seen an increase in the number of viewers aged 29 to 49 for its prime time programs. In its programming, Knowledge Network covers a range of topics, including politics, history and culture, arts and music, health, parenting and science. It features a children's block, Knowledge Kids, which features the characters Luna, Chip and Inkie. [9] With funding from the provincial government and more than 40,000 individual donors, Knowledge Network acquires and orders more than 750 hours of original programming per year. In 2011, Knowledge Network acquired Shaw Media's stake in the BBC Kids children's television service and converted it into an ad-free service. Knowledge Network launched an HD stream on September 25, 2013. [11] It became available to Shaw Cable and Shaw Direct customers on October 8, 2013.
