This article is about the cooked version. For the raw version, see Raw Sharks. Sharks can be obtained by cooking raw sharks at fire ranges or cooking. They can be cooked with level 80 Cooking and cure up to 2,000 live points each. Sharks are fished with harpoons requiring 76 fishing, but they can also be fished barehanded, which requires level 96 fishing, level 76 Strength, and part compression of Barbarian Training. Raw sharks can be caught in most net fishing/harpoon spots; Several locations include the Fishing Association, Catherby, Burgh de Rott, Rellekka, Jatizso, and northwest Elf Camp. Sharks can also be frozen by granite lobster, level 74 common suit. The shark gives 110 fishing experiences per catch and 210 cooking experiences when cooked. Players never stop burning sharks (even with cooking stimulated to over 100) unless they wear cookware, where sharks stop burning at level 94 cooking, or use the benefits of a cooking cap. Using cook-all, full inventory of sharks (28) can be cooked within 68 seconds, as they take four ticks of their respective games to cook. Each inventory will give up to 5,880 cooking experiences, and that number is guaranteed at level 94 cooking with cookware. Banking time varies, but doing the full round in 75 seconds (seven second banks) will produce 282,240 cooking experiences in an hour. Sharks are very useful when inside Wilderness, as they restore up to 2,000 points of life and are reasonably cheap. For many players, it is common practice to fill their inventory with sharks before entering the wilderness. Sharks used to be the most popular food for members, but with the introduction of Living Rock Caverns and rocktails, the use of sharks has greatly decreased. While rocktails can restore more live points (up to 2,300), some people prefer sharks because they are easier to get and cheaper alternatives. If the benefits have been unlocked, large white sharks are raw respected 50% of the time when fishing sharks. Players can sometimes get big sharks during fishing. This can be installed in the Skills Hall at home owned by a player with a level of 76 Construction. See here for how to help! Update 27 February 2002 (Update): Before 2007, the price of sharks was quite stable at about 1,000 coins each. However, real-world traders and macroers who catch sharks bring prices down to as low as 400 coins each in the summer of 2007. In 2008, sharks were around 800 coins each. After trading offset macro and boat updates is no longer useful and as these shark supplies decline and prices rise. The popularity of the PvP world is increasing demand for sharks even more. This is combined with inflation from drops in the world of PvP and brings sharks to around 1,500 coins each. Shark prices then fall when supplies are trapped and surpassed demand for player-killers, causing prices to fall further. By February 2011, shark prices fall to almost 500 each, with the release of free trade. In May 2011 the price of cooked sharks was at 410 stable coins for a long time. After nuke Boat update, shark prices surge as boats no longer fish them, but fall slowly as the boat makes their way back into the game. Prior to the release of the Grand Exchange, Edgeville was a popular place to buy and sell sharks due to its proximity to the wilderness. It was used until the closure of Bounty Hunter Worlds, as many PKers run out of food and could not be bothered to go to the Grand Exchange. Sometimes the price of cooked sharks is very past the price for the crude. Therefore, they are usually used to cook to make a profit. (Beware of losing some investments to burn.) On Evil Bob Island, if you have a shark cooked in your inventory and try to unravel it, it tells you that you need 40 levels of uncooking. According to Brugsen Bursen at the Grand Exchange, the cooked shark was once worth just 5 coins. [1] ^ Brugsen Bursen, RuneScape. Well, the quantity is constantly increasing. I remember the day when you could buy some cooked sharks for five coins!
